False fire alarms threaten safety of campus residents, community, Security says

By STEPHEN KLEEMAN

After a rash of false fire alarms, University Security plans to offer a substantial reward for information leading to the successful arrest and prosecution of anyone caught intentionally causing a false alarm, according to Brian Eckert, director of media relations.

Eckert said there were more than 300 false fire alarms during the fall semester alone, a run of more than two a day. Eckert said the situation has affected residence halls on both North and South Campus and threatens the safety of both campus residents and the surrounding community.

"If firefights are deployed on a phony alarm and a real fire breaks out somewhere, people are endangered," Eckert said.

Regina Lawson, the director of security, issued further concern.

"Every time a false alarm is sounded, we are on alert at a building as quickly as possible, and the alarms have to be taken very seriously. It's a real fire, and situation is a great danger and can occur very suddenly,"" she said.

Most of the phony alarms are caused by simply activating pull stations. Others have been caused by bluing smoke detectors and setting prank fires in trash cans. Other equipment, such as fire extinguishers, has been vandalized.

"These acts put a great strain on the campus security staff," Lawson said.

The Winston-Salem Fire Department has already had to send a call out on false alarms at Wake Forest.

Lawson said the situation is "extremely concerning." The United States Fire Department issued further warnings about the possibility of having a false fire alarm and a real fire break out elsewhere, people would not be able to get out in time.

Every time a false alarm goes off, the Winston-Salem Fire Department responds to many calls at Wake Forest and other campus locations.

The challenge is to have a believable budget proposal for the coming school year and take the steps necessary to get the budget proposal, in addition to considering funding for the proposed new residence hall and the possible development of a master of accountancy program and a divinity school.

Security will continue to place a substance on fire to determine if the fire is real.

"We encourage people to take steps because it will be to their benefit," Lawson said. "People will not be able to get out of a building if a real fire breaks out.

"This is a problem in which a small group of people can cause great harm to the entire university. Security will continue to place a substance on fire that is visible under ultraviolet light, but according to the department, 80 percent or 100 percent of people who see a false fire alarm don't get into the area.

SG President creates task force, parking conflict to be evaluated

By JENNIFER MILLER

SG President Zeke Creech recently announced the formation of a task force to examine parking space allocations on campus.

The task force was created in response to a growing number of cars and the number of spaces available in both on-campus and off-campus parking lots.

"We have heard from students, faculty, and staff about the effectiveness of the changes in the parking management policy that resulted from the first task force," Creech said.

According to Brian Eckert, the director of media relations, the issue came to Winston-Salem News in November when he interviewed the students and administrators to the news account in North Carolina during the presidential campaign.

The report was aired on a 10-minute segment on the News & Observer News Hour in early December.

"Zeke Creech, the editor of the recently published work called My Place, which tells the story of the black community in the South, will be available to students on campus in the College Bookstore 2 p.m. to 5 p.m.

Creech expressed student concerns about the selection of the black student body and the importance of the black student experience and the new residence hall.

Doctors seek genetic cause, cure for high blood pressure

Doctors are closing in on the underlying genetic cause of high blood pressure and are developing increasingly effective treatments for the disease.

There were among the conclusions presented during a symposium celebrating the opening of the Center for Excellence in Hypertension at the Bowman Gray School of Medicine.

The symposium attracted more than 200 physicians and basic scientists from several states.

Bowen Gray's hypertension center began last summer with the arrival of Dr. Calvisi Fantini from the Cleveland Clinic in Ohio. Fantini is an internationally recognized hypertension specialist and director of the hypertension research program at the Cleveland Clinic.

While the overall tone of the meeting was optimistic, those attending were reminded that we're closer than thought to identifying the genetic cause of hypertension (high blood pressure) is a major public health problem affecting as many as 400 million Americans. For many, it's a deadly disease.

Kaplan also said hypertension is more common among those who abuse alcohol. But, he added, light alcohol use actually benefits patients.

Researchers often counsel that hypertensive patients should stop drinking when, in fact, some might benefit from a small amount.

Kaplan warned that physicians need to pay greater attention to the variation in blood pressure that occurs during a 24-hour period.

Monitoring blood pressure over 24 hours is more expensive, but hourly measurements of blood pressure provide a more accurate assessment of the severity of hypertension. He said patients can benefit from this information and that changes in treatment that are readily available for taking pulse and blood pressure.

Kaplan said reducing blood pressure even a bit among people with hypertension can help bring the disease under control.

Researchers said during the symposium that "think we're closer than thought to identifying the genetic cause for hypertension, thanks to the advances in genetic engineering."

Whichever the focus in the 1990s will be in battling the disease's precursor and finding ways to cure and prevent hypertension, Fantini said "we can only do that through basic research."

Workshop to explore value of laughter against illness, stress

Health-care professionals will enjoy the laugh lab Feb. 5, as a workshop to help them to bring laughter into their work on the workplace, patients and families. Organizers are role-playing the scenario in a hope that health-care workers will appreciate the joy of laughter in their work. In the workshop, participants will learn how humor can enhance their personal and professional relationships. This is not just a mood-lifting routine, but full of important and solid information for the development and application of humor to everyday situations.

Throughout the day participants will attend small discussions in small groups, having the opportunity to apply humor in health care settings. The workshop will end at 11:30 a.m. on Feb. 5th, in the Stone Chapel.

Ceremony leads to speculation on 'new era'

By: Brian Talmadge

The speeches are over, the National Mall has emptied itself back into the mundane routines of daily life, and all that remains is to wonder how the new era will differ from the old.

Inauguration '93

Whaples said. He gave the speech of 1991 as a way to measure direct comparison. "The speeches have been different in growth and spirit, but it appears that the new era is coming into your new era," as New York Times. In the Washington Post, an editorial was written by Richard Cohen. What's the difference? Whaples said, the speeches have been different. While the political climate may have been the same, the rhetoric was different. The new era will be marked by a new set of expectations and goals for the country.

The events listed on the official schedule of last week's Inaugural festivities were half of what we saw in the nation's capital in the days preceding the swearing-in. Inaugural parades, rejected, and ridiculed charity television specials were merely the newest in a long line of examples of what is wrong with the American political system.

Evenson Madonna cannot revive this dying Body

Madonna, the 34-year-old self-made sex symbol, suffering a premature mid-life crisis?

In a recent interview with New York magazine's "Vanity Fair," Madonna herself hinted at the possibility of retirement, saying, "I have to admit, my family has been a little bit bored with me."

However, contrary to her own perceived boredom, the audience was anything but. The sold-out crowd at the Times Square Theatre was captivated by Madonna's energetic performance, which included a medley of hit songs from her latest album, "Like a Virgin." The audience, dressed in her signature black and gold, danced and sang along as she took the stage, accompanied by a live band that included horns and a gospel choir.

Despite the high expectations, Madonna's performance was met with mixed reviews. While some praised her vocal prowess and dance skills, others criticized her lack of musical originality and her reliance on past hits.

But for those in the audience who were there to see the icon, Madonna's performance was a reminder of why she has remained a cultural phenomenon for over three decades. Her ability to reinvent herself and stay relevant in an ever-evolving industry is something that few others have achieved.

Kuhn portrays Jesus in new light

By Linda Mouley

In an era in which there is a call for a return to the religious, the portrayal of Jesus in the upcoming film "The Gospel of Luke" is particularly relevant. The film, directed by Martin Scorsese, features a fresh interpretation of the story of Jesus' life.

The critic's initial reaction to the film was positive, praising the performances of the actors and the overall production value. However, after further reflection, the critic realized that the portrayal of Jesus in the film was not conventional. The critic was taken aback by the modern twists and turns that were taken in the interpretation of the story.

The critic notes that the film challenges the traditional depiction of Jesus as a perfect, infallible being. Instead, the film portrays Jesus as a human being with flaws and weaknesses, much like the rest of us.

It's 1912, and the music of the time is based on the light of New Orleans. The Debutantes, a group of young women from the city's upper class, are attending a ball in the hopes of finding a suitable match. The music is light and airy, with a touch of the old-time jazz that is just beginning to take hold.

As the night wears on, the mood changes, and the music becomes more intense. The Debutantes are drawn to the energy of the new jazz, and they are soon dancing the night away.

The critic notes that the use of period music in the film creates a sense of time and place, and it effectively sets the mood for the rest of the film.

The critic's overall reaction to the film was positive, praising the performances of the actors and the music. However, the critic was left with a sense of the past, a time when jazz was new and exciting, and a time when women were free to explore their own desires.

Women’s basketball team wins one of three

Levone stands WPU vs. 64-60 win over Duke

By CANADA BURTON

A second-half surge led by junior Nicole Levone, who tied the game at Duke 64-60 Monday at Cameron Indoor Stadium, helped erase a 14-point halftime deficit.

The Deacons, down by as many as 19 points, rallied in the second half, led by Levone’s 31 points.

"Duke ran a match-up zone (defense) which hurt us in the first half. They matched up with us in the second half," Coach Keno Pearson said of the Deacons’ first-half struggle.

"I think the biggest change we made in the second half was getting the ball inside the paint," Pearson continued.

Nicole Levone

The Deacons attacked the basket more and put the ball inside the paint.

Levone scored 31 points, a Deacon career high.

"Nicole Levone is a very good player, a very good scorer, but tonight she was in her own world," Pearson added.

Nicole Levone scored 31 points, tying a career high.

Levone, who has 18 career double-doubles, is the 14th Deacon to record 31 or more points in a game.

Nicole Levone

Levone ended her career with 1,845 career points, tying Lauren Brunner for third place in ACC history.

"Nicole has been a great player for us," Pearson said. "She’s a great kid and great person. We’re going to miss her.

Nicole Levone scored 31 points, tying her career high.
