Springfest events in full swing

Kerry King

One of the most popular Wake Forest traditions will be well underway by the time you read this story. Springfest "began earlier this week and will conclude Saturday," said the master of ceremonies.

The annual event is sponsored by College Union Council and has become as much a springrite as the first day of school. The event features free music, art, food and fun for all ages.

"I'm really excited," said a student from the Tulane University of Community Participation in the arts. "I'm really excited to see what all the different groups have to offer." The event will be held on the steps of the Deady Building.

Springfest is a great way for students to come together and enjoy the community. There will be live music, art exhibits, and food vendors throughout the day.

School of athletics? Hottinger plans questioned

George J. Wilson

The administration of Wake Forest University is considering the possibility of adding a School of Athletics to the current offerings.

At a recent meeting of the Board of Trustees, President Jan Tenenbaum expressed her support for the idea of expanding the university's athletic facilities.

"I think it's a great idea," said Tenenbaum. "We need to do something to keep up with the rest of the schools." The president noted that many other universities have added schools of athletics in recent years.

However, some members of the faculty and student body are concerned about the potential impact of such a move.

"I'm not sure about this," said one professor. "We already have a lot of commitments on our plate." The professor noted that the university has a number of other priorities, including academic excellence and community service.

Another student added, "I don't think we need another school just for athletics." The student noted that the university already has a strong athletics program.

The board of trustees will be considering the idea at their next meeting.

Maya Angelou: courageous, cheerful, lovely, loving

Catherine S. Brown and Jackie McKnight

Maya Angelou, poet and author, was born on May 24, 1928 in St. Louis, Missouri. She was the first in her family to attend college and became a professor at Wake Forest University in 1953.

Angelou was a dynamic speaker and writer, known for her powerful and uplifting messages. Her work has been widely read and studied, and her legacy continues to inspire people around the world.

"I think Angelou was a true inspiration," said one student. "She had a way of making people feel good about themselves." The student noted that Angelou's messages of hope and empowerment were especially relevant in today's world.

Another professor added, "Angelou was a master at capturing the essence of the human experience." The professor noted that Angelou's work is still relevant today and continues to inspire people to live their best lives.

The Legacy of Maya Angelou: Courageous, Cheerful, Lovely, Loving, by Catherine S. Brown and Jackie McKnight, is available now. The book is a wonderful tribute to a true American icon.
Off-campus living allows privacy

Luke Wood

The reasons students at Wake Forest elect to live off campus are many reasons, according to student and alumni surveys. Some students choose to live off campus to have more freedom and independence. Others may want to have access to more resources or services that are not available on campus. Some students may also choose to live off campus because they prefer the lifestyle that comes with being off campus, such as more privacy and control over their living environment.

The decision to live off campus is an entirely personal experience. It includes a degree of responsibility, as living on campus or off campus both offer advantages and challenges.

Senior Majors demand sheepskins

Cindy Allen

The number of graduating seniors demanding sheepskins is low, and the department is receiving fewer requests because of the reduced demand for diplomas.

Earlier this year, the company that has supplied the sheepskin diplomas went out of business. Consequently, the university decided to change their supply chain to minimize expenses.

The sheepskin diplomas will now be issued to students at the year's end and thus makes the department ineligible for the housing estimates projected by requests because of the increased demand for diplomas.

Punt!

A proposal by physical education department chairwoman Mary Bennett recommending the establishment of inclusion of athletics at universities nationwide has created quite a stir among faculty members at Wake Forest University. Under this proposal, athletics would be considered a separate function of the university and would not be required to meet traditional academic standards. But, they would receive a four-year scholarship to any university of their choosing.

Instead, they would receive a four-year scholarship to any university of their choosing. While this is expected to result in increased earnings, the proposal is being carefully examined by university administrators.

Tradition

The traditional adhesion to Christian values has been so strong at the Baptist school that most faculty members would not consider changing it. The tradition has been that Wake Forest athletes would be required to attend church services every Sunday.

And Monday one of the last basketball games of the season was played. Wake Forest comes to an end this weekend, as the basketball season comes to a close.

The Wake Forest men's tennis team completed their regular season schedule this week with respectable victories over Maryland and N.C. Stale. Finishing a disappointing spring campaign on a bright note, Sunday, the second ranked and most exciting match was between the Eagles and Terps. The Eagles won a tight match in three sets.

Maryland played exceptionally well against Leighton, however the Eagles bolted away in the second set and could not be caught up.

"Anything can happen," said coach John Leighton, "but we've had the best team in the nation so far this year. Our team is the best team in the nation.

"We're the best team in the Atlantic Coast Conference," added coach John Leighton, "and we're going into the tournament with anticipation of winning and we're very close to being the best team in the nation.

Wade scored needed 1st goal 1st period.

Freshman Deane, who has scored a total of 25 goals, said he played a little bit better.

"Our team played this month, but we've scored enough goals in three days," he added.
