No. 3

By Gregory Clausen

The B. R. Reynolds summer home, Reynolds House, is nestled in Reynolda Village, a tree-lined, sun-dappled neighborhood just a block south of Wake Forest University’s campus. The house, the gardens adjacent to Reynolds House, and the Reynolda Village Golf Course, however, are surrounded by Wake Forest. "The house is a continent distant from the university," said Tom Shoemaker, assistant professor of sociology. "Students in the English Department have their own version of the Reynolda House Summer Program. They go on there."

Reynolds House is used for several different functions, including the annual Summer Festival of Dance, which is part of the Reynolda Village Summer Festival. The festival includes performances by local artists, including the Wake Forest Dance Company, the Wake Forest Wind Ensemble, and the Wake Forest College Chorale. The festival is a major fundraiser for the Reynolda House, which is a private, non-profit organization.

Reynolds House is also a popular venue for social events, including weddings, receptions, and private parties. The house is located in the heart of the Reynolda Village area, and is surrounded by beautiful gardens and trees. The house and gardens are open to the public during the summer, and are a popular destination for visitors to the area.

For more information on the Reynolda House Summer Festival, or to schedule a visit to the house and gardens, please contact Tom Shoemaker at (336) 758-3323.

Frat functions designed to attract rushees

By Doug Vickery

Winston-Salem State University wants to promote to prospective members of several fraternity and sorority organizations. The events, which are being held to attract male and female students, are sponsored by the Inter-Society Council, which represents the university's fraternities and sororities.

The fall rush period is geared primarily toward sophomore and junior students. According to Jeff Reynolds, president of the Inter-Society Council, those women who have been here more than one semester petition, cut-throat rush and go to their fraternity of choice.

Once a man has joined a fraternity, his early duties are aimed at teaching him the ways and means of the organization. This includes learning the rules, the history and the traditions of the fraternity. In addition, he must learn the chapter's standards of behavior and conduct.

Those students who have been at the university for two years or more have a good idea of where they want to go, Reynolds said. This is because they have a good idea of what it takes to be successful in a fraternity. Reynolds also believes that the fall rush period is a good way to meet the brothers and to observe the different characteristics of their fraternities. Many fraternity representatives agree that the fall rush period is one of the most important times of the year for the fraternity.

Letters to the editor

Criticisms of Dean challenged

By John Dean

John Dean is a historical figure with an insider's viewpoint. He is known for his role in the Watergate scandal. His testimony during the Senate hearings showcased a deep desire for knowledge and understanding of the events that transpired. He sought to provide a comprehensive account of the involvement of various government officials, including the White House, in the illegal activities that led to his resignation. Dean's perspective, while controversial, offered a unique perspective on the events that defined a significant chapter in American politics.

Summer school changes perspective

Summer programs are designed to provide an opportunity for students to engage in academic work outside of the traditional semesters. They offer a chance for students to deepen their knowledge, explore new subjects, or prepare for the upcoming academic year. Summer school is often seen as an extension of the academic year, offering flexibility and a chance to catch up or get ahead. The changes in the summer school program might involve adjustments to the curriculum, schedule, or location, which can impact student participation and outcomes.

Fraternities

Fraternities are social organizations that often focus on academics, community service, and leadership development. They aim to provide members with a supportive environment where they can engage in activities that align with their interests and values. Fraternities can foster a sense of community and help students develop valuable skills and connections. However, it is essential to ensure that these organizations adhere to ethical and moral standards, as they can sometimes face scrutiny over their practices and values.

High drinking age means problems

The legal drinking age in the United States is 21, which means that any college student under this age is legally prohibited from consuming alcohol. This age limit is in place to protect the health and safety of young adults. However, the enforcement of such laws can sometimes lead to problems, especially when it comes to addressing the social norms and expectations related to alcohol consumption among college students. The high drinking age may not always correlate with responsible behavior, and institutions are often tasked with finding effective strategies to promote responsible consumption and mitigate the potential risks associated with underage drinking.
All that is warm, all that is human can be found in a compassionate movie adaptation of John Irving's best-selling novel. "Wish You Were Here," directed by Alan J. Pakula, and produced by Robert M. Shapiro, is a magnificent show business drama that transcends the family and is ripe for a sequel.

The movie, however, focuses not on the description of a fateful journey with parents and children, but on the family itself and the people who make it up. The Irving story takes its proper place in the history of the family, and the family makes a proper place for it. The Irving family, like all families, is a product of its environment, a product of its time, a product of its place.

This is the family's story, the story of the family, the story of the family who have made it up. This is the family's story, the story of the family, the story of the family who have made it up.

Art projects dual study

By Steve Reys and Margaret Miller

If art is your passion, Wake Forest could be a promising choice. While there probably would not be a specific major at Wake Forest, art enthusiasts would have many opportunities for exploration and development of their interests. Art can also be a means to self-expression and personal growth.

"The art department here at Wake Forest is very good," stated Charles Neal. "It is a place where you can take a course, try something new, and develop your skills. There are many opportunities for art majors to grow in the art department at Wake Forest."

Students interested in art can gain valuable experiences through participation in art-related courses and activities. For example, the art department offers programs such as the Fine Arts Center, which provides students with opportunities to work with professional artists and gain hands-on experience in various art forms. Additionally, Wake Forest has a reputation for producing talented art alumni, fostering an environment that encourages creativity and artistic expression.

"The art department at Wake Forest is a great place to work," said Charles Neal. "It is a place where you can develop your skills and grow artistically. There are many opportunities for students to gain valuable experiences through participation in art-related courses and activities."
SG hopes communications improve

By Jeff Taylor

Student Government's primary goal for this school year is to further develop the lines of communication with other State Forest students in order to increase their involvement in its activities.

"Our main objective is to improve communications with students to make this really a 'student' government, not a government of a couple," said Geoffrey Holt, SG president. "I think that's what really needs to be emphasized."

Convinced by the lack of knowledge in and participation by SG, President James Ralph Wake said, "SG needs to take seriously the role it should reflect the voice of students." He said, "One of the keys of the student government is to improve the kind of legislation the student body is handled. SG is considering a number for a column..." Waken did say, however, that the students are doing a job in a temporary building, and that the building is not permanent.

"We'll be looking at different possibilities for a temporary building," he said. "The building is not permanent, so we're looking at temporary buildings that can be moved around and set up to last 18 months." Waken added, "The SG office will be the building, either by constructing a new building or by attaching two buildings to the old one."

Tertulia topics focus on culture

By Lyne Birkett

The Spanish department, in conjunction with the Spanish house, is offering a new program called Tertulia. Coordinator of Spanish Erica Trelles is the coordinator for the group, which consists of discussions in Spanish.

These discussions will be held every other Thursday from 7:30-9:30 p.m. in the Spanish house. Each session will be conducted by a member of the Spanish department who will bring a list of students who have been enrolled in the departmental test.

Trelles will prepare a basic outline for the group.

Tertulia will stage open forums for Latin American or Spanish cultural and artistic events. For example, there will also be several sessions featuring Calle, music and drama. Many students enjoy these sessions, and they are open to anyone interested in learning more about the culture.

The last discussion was centered around the Spanish house. It was decided that the Spanish house will become the center of activity for the Spanish department and Spanish students. Although the program has only just started, the atmosphere of the discussion at the Spanish house is very inviting. Any student who wishes to get involved is welcome to come and find this extra opportunity to speak in Spanish.

"This program will be extremely beneficial to the students," said Glenn. "A big problem for students is that they don't want to repeat for the same classes, so this is an excellent opportunity for them to skip introductory level courses."

Tertulia is a great way to learn about the Spanish culture," said Kathy Lucas, co-sponsored by the Spanish department.

Students improve houses

By Marianne Van Noorden

A diverse group of people and families are working on improving living conditions. Several families are in the Wake Forest neighborhood. There are families engaged in work to improve the housing.

The Wake Forest Housing Improvement Association.

The day began with a short meeting to discuss the progress of the project. After the project discussion, attendees gathered to learn more about the housing options available in the Wake Forest Housing Improvement Association.

The group consists of concerned citizens and neighbors helping each other out.

Father Glenn is a local resident and member of the Wake Forest community. He brought the group together, giving them an overview of the project.

The group members work on the houses throughout the year. The project is supported by the Wake Forest community.

Their efforts have been recognized by the Wake Forest community.

The group continues to help the Wake Forest community.

Contributions hit high mark

By Lyne Birkett

Donations to Wake Forest's Interfaith Housing Alliance have increased in the last year, more than doubling the amount raised in previous years.

For example, last spring two sections of French I were taught at Wake Forest, with only four students enrolled in each section. As the number of students increased, so did the donations.

In general, the department decreased the number of French I students by 50 percent. With the increased donations, the department had to decrease the number of French I students.

Haddock fields young but very talented golfers

By Ernie Harvey

The Wake Forest men's and women's golf teams have arrived as talented young players. Golf coach Jim Bowman believes that despite their young age, the Demon Deacons have a bright future.

Bowman said that the team's strengths are in their depth and experience. He sees the team emerging as one of the top teams in the country within the next few years.

By Kimberly Hall

The women's tennis team opened its season at home against a very strong match against Purdue College.

The Demon women played well against their Big Ten opponents, but the final score was 7-0. In singles, junior Anne Schatzman and senior Robyn Wurster defeated their opponents in straight sets, but the team was unable to capture any of the remaining matches.
