Task force promotes awareness

by Lynne Karp

The need to combat the abuse of alcohol has been a major concern for the university. In order to better address this problem, the Task Force for Responsible Alcohol Usage, headed by Abraham Abush, said, “Preventing the abuse of alcohol is a major priority.”

The public health and educational information appearing on the web sites of the alcohol assistance groups should be enhanced. There are many ways to combat this issue. The two major ways include increasing awareness and preventing the abuse of alcohol. The first goal of the task force is to increase awareness. The second goal is to prevent the abuse of alcohol.

The task force will conduct a panel discussion on the topic of alcohol abuse. The panelists will include members of the alcohol assistance groups who are experts in this field. The discussion will be held on Friday, March 26 at 3 p.m. in the Alumni Center.

Opponents defend liquor stance

by Pamela Ware

Liquor-to-the-bar regulations are being challenged. However, President Sanford has not yet decided whether or not to approve the regulations. The regulations are being challenged by the students who are opposed to the idea of liquor being served on campus.

The students’ main point of contention is that the regulations are too restrictive. They argue that the regulations would prevent them from enjoying the benefits of drinking responsibly. The students also argue that the regulations would lead to an increase in the number of students who drink alcohol on campus.

The students have expressed their concerns in a letter to the administration. They have asked for a meeting with the administration to discuss their concerns. The administration has not yet responded to the letter.

The students have also filed a complaint with the state of North Carolina. The state has the authority to determine whether or not the regulations are legal. The state has not yet ruled on the complaint.

The students have also organized a rally to protest the regulations. The rally will be held on Thursday, March 25 at 4 p.m. in the quad.

The administration has stated that it is considering the students’ concerns. However, it has not yet made a decision on whether or not to approve the regulations.

Schools fight standards

by Anne Collins

The College of Business at Wake Forest University has decided to implement a new set of standards for its management science program. The new standards are designed to ensure that students are prepared for careers in business.

The new standards will require students to complete a set of courses that cover all aspects of management science. The courses will include topics such as quantitative methods, economics, and accounting.

The new standards are designed to prepare students for careers in business. Students who complete the new standards will be better prepared to enter the workforce after graduation.

The new standards will also require students to complete a set of case studies. The case studies will be designed to help students develop critical thinking skills.

The new standards are expected to be implemented in the fall of 2019.

Challenge conference

The 17th Challenge symposium begins today. Most of it occurs on the campus, but it is the epitome of society rush. To attend the banquet will cost $5.00 per person, but the welcome is free to the public. It will be easier not to go the latter. Participating in the Challenge will count towards the semester minimum but it will be an investment in your education and an investment in the future of the educational environment at Wake Forest.

Two years ago, Challenge consultant Alex Hailey Maye stated that students have said since they registered that they were interested in attending and can't believe that they have not had a chance to talk to the former students.

In the past two years, from now on you will be glad you did.

I'm not sure if there is a banquet, though.

Last year's Challenge was conceived of in a turbulent and idealistic light. Like any other year, the men's movement is in one form or another beclouding the decade of assassinations, Viet Nam and space revolution. As the NAACP codifies, the ERA and the student movement programs expand, Challenge is losing its shine of enlightenment extinguished. Hence, the challenge program has experienced a surplus. There has been with system less money, less prominent speakers, less support and less attendance, according to co-director Doug Niswander.

In a few weeks, when the spring long and gone and the students who have organized Challenge have left campus, the Challenge committee plans to spend more time on not only this year's Challenge, but the entire challenge on campus and its prospects for the future.

Challenge can be diminished, student autonomy, freedom, self-expression, and more intense and scholarly atmosphere. It appears to be a temporal issue it is a unique W F issue.

Let's turn our backs, shun, and let the Challenge symposium tradition slip away.

Circus magic still there

It was a show designed for the benefit of the Wake Forest College Band and the Department of Theater and Dance's "Barnum and Bailey Circus." The "circus" itself, however, was more of a sideshow of the type you see at carnivals. The tickets to the show were$0.50 each. Though there was a little interest, the ticket takers had their work cut out for them.

J. Walter Williams and his wild student assistants, strolling with the bands, singing with the students, and generally drawing in the crowds.

In the middle of the magnificent Barnum and Bailey circus was a slightly disheveled, but still laughing, and smiling, Richard Chandler. Candler was joined by his wife, who was also a director of the student activities department.

The show was a great deal of fun, even if the circus itself was a bit of a disappointment. The circus was not at all aimed at the young, but at anyone who was interested in a good time.

And this was the only thing.

Even despite the fact that it was the 1960's, it was still a very sophisticated, serious event. The event made us feel that they are the ones who are running the show, and not us.

Promotion implies progress. As a rule, the more educated one becomes, the higher one's social status, the higher the social class to which that person belongs.

Ruth Zultzner

A startling, splendid, metamorphic journey from the University Theater's effective repertoire of entertaining performances, "Company" is currently being performed by Stages on Broad.

The show is about a bathtub. But it is also the story of the rest of the cast, directed by Donald R. Wallis, connection professor of the University's College of Business Administration, and the cleverest and most colorful bathtub ever seen on Broadway.

Old, beat up, decorated with a series of barbershop stencils, the bathtub presently belongs to the barbershop quartet that happens to be doing a show at present. They are not interested in the bathtub. They are interested in their show.

Despite the efforts of the barbershop quartet to eliminate the bathtub from their show, the tub remains. Through a series of misadventures, the tub is eventually taken under the wing of the barbershop quartet, and they must find a way to incorporate the bathtub into their show. This leads to a series of hilarious and clever musical numbers that showcase the talents of the cast.

The bathtub is a symbol of the way that life can be unexpected and unpredictable. It represents the idea that even the most mundane objects can become central to the story of a show, and that the most unexpected elements can lead to the most surprising and creative outcomes.

The show features a talented ensemble cast, with standout performances by Jennifer Jones as Joanne and Frank G. Kimball as Dr. Dinkham. The music is a shining highlight, with songs like "I'm Still" and "The Little Things" showcasing the talents of the cast.

Overall, "Company" is a clever and entertaining musical that defies expectations and leaves the audience laughing and humming long after the show has ended. It is a testament to the power of creativity and the ability of stories to surprise and delight us.
AIAW Deacs' last hope

by Phil Dickash

The Wake Forest women's basketball team, sporting a "dismal" 2-29 record went into the NC AAU tournament at Statesville with hopes of winning the team tournament and one better last week: the season's opening meeting of the season, yesterday's opening day game against4.

"A lot of people didn't think we had a chance to win," said senior forward Jennifer Jordan. "We worked hard all season, but we didn't think we'd be in the playoffs." Jordan, a 6-foot-2 center, scored 13 points and added nine rebounds in the Deacs' 54-50 victory over Davidson College. "We played well defensively and were able to keep Davidson off the boards," Jordan said.

"The team played well together, and we were able to get the ball out of the players' hands," said head coach Mary Clark. "We were able to get our offense going and keep Davidson from getting too many second-chance baskets." The Deacs, who are the number-three seed in the tournament, will play Eastern North Carolina in the semifinals today at 4 p.m.

Snow slows IMS; Same teams on top

The Off Grid and Black Top 28 were streamlined and accelerated, as weather conditions were less than ideal. The field was muddy and many drivers were less than practiced. The event was postponed due to weather problems.

Snow slowly improved the track, allowing drivers to practice and get ready for the big race. The event was expected to be run on the one-mile oval this weekend.

Runners await ACC Meet

by John Landers

The Wake Forest track team and the United States Postal Service have one thing in common: neither will be able to cross the finish line much faster than the other.

"This indoor season has really gotten us into shape for the outdoor season," said sophomore 1,500-meter runner Michael Robinson. "The Postal Service has challenged us to be faster, and we've responded by improving our times." Robinson, who holds the national record in the 1,500-meter run, went into the ACC meet last week, finished fourth in the event and set a personal-best time of 4:14.15, a new personal record.

"I'm really impressed by how well our team has performed," said head coach Mary Clark. "We were able to run well in the ACC meet, and we're looking forward to the outdoor season." The team's next meet is scheduled for March 27 at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro.

Tensions escalate in 1970’s

by Cathy Woodard

(A last in series)

Controversies in the Baptist world are often the result of disagreements over church policies, personnel issues, and financial management. The most recent controversy to come to light is the ongoing dispute between Wake Forest University and the Baptist Convention of North Carolina.

The Baptist Convention and Wake Forest University have a long history of cooperation, dating back to the early 1960s. However, recent events have caused the relationship to become strained.

The controversy began in 1967 when the Convention’s Executive Committee recommended that Wake Forest discontinue its cooperative program with the Baptist Convention. This recommendation was made in response to concerns about the university’s commitment to the principles of the Southern Baptist Convention.

However, the recommendation was not approved by the Wake Forest Board of Trustees, and the cooperative program continued. Since then, the relationship between the two entities has been rocky.

In recent years, the Convention has been critical of Wake Forest’s actions. For example, the Convention was upset when the university decided to build a new gymnasium without consulting the Convention. The Convention also criticized the university for not providing adequate financial support for the Cooperative Program.

In response, Wake Forest has defended its actions, saying that the university is a private institution and has the right to make its own decisions. However, the Convention believes that the university is not fulfilling its obligations under the Cooperative Program.

The current controversy centers on the issue of the university’s commitment to the Baptist Convention. The Convention has been critical of Wake Forest’s recent actions, including the university’s decision to build a new library without consulting the Convention.

The Convention’s recommendation was rejected, and the university insists that it will continue to fulfill its obligations under the Cooperative Program. However, the Convention remains skeptical of the university’s commitment.

The dispute between the Convention and the university is likely to continue for some time, as both parties are committed to their positions. The situation will be closely monitored by the wider Baptist community, as the outcome of this dispute could have implications for the future of the Cooperative Program.
