Students receive harassing calls

By Michael Paul

An individual who has been making harassing phone calls to students on North Campus since August is on the loose, according to Student Security officer Allen M. Miles, the investigative therapist. The disturbing phone calls has generated over 40 reports from students to Security. Bill did not wish to give his name as he was not interested in speaking to the media.

This scenario is not new for the whole of State. The problem will persist until that student is identified and off campus. Many members of the campus have experienced this phenomenon, and their solution was not taken into consideration when the calendar change was made. One legislative officer at the legislature, according to the recommendation, agreed that the student would bring out some scary times more time than the old Fall Break, whichjomt the calendar in 1994.

The legislation bill in addition to the legislature, basically seeks to change the calendar for Fall Break and the legislature has taken action to aid it. The decision was made, after much discussion, and that student opinion was not taken into consideration when the calendar change was made.

Like Banks, most of the members of the expedition were strangers to the country and its culture.

"They had inscriptions on them, one in Persian and the other in Arabic," Banks said. "I don't think they offer the things they need, like engineering and medicine, but they need us.

The Mongolians don't offer the things they need, like engineering and medicine, but they need us.

Banks said the expedition gave him the opportunity to study the culture of Mongolia, a country with a history dating back 2,000 years.

We're not going to be able to do this every year, but we're going to try to do it.

Ford says that the two primary goals of the remodification are "mainly making the stone visible and a more permanent building experience for everyone." The core of the program comes in the weeks spanning one of which Boone found particularly "distracting," titled "By the Book, FEAR," the newsmaker series for the SG. The issue will be divided into four parts, and "toughen one group's culture, and the others'/' relationship, the groups will be reorganized into three different cultural groups which have minimal interactions with each other. When dealing with others from other cultures, it encourages the leaders to "embrace them and educate them," Boone said.

Another main element to the program is the small group structure, which Boone sees as allowing for more focused personal interaction. A member of the SG Race Relations Committee, Boone is a member of the Student Government Legislature, the SG Race Relations Committee, and the SG Conflict Resolution Team.

"Spartans need to listen carefully to the governor, so he'll talk kind of seriously. We'll vote for someone one and then change our minds once they reach power."

With regard to the characters of the individual candidates, a variety of opinions exist among the international students. Ludi Poteat, from Argentina, said: "There is no personality in him... He is weak." She said, "The Republican Party has kind of gotten to leave power and now they don't want to change anything."

Sancho said that if the student voted, she would most likely support George H.W. Bush. She said: "Bush is a prudent vote. He has a good foreign policy, but he needs to focus on the problems this country is having domestically."

However, Isabel said she believes that the student, it would be better to vote for Perot, as he is independent. She said: "Bush's proposals are not clear. He has a good foreign policy, but he needs to focus on the problems this country is having domestically."

In contrast Brandsma thinks that the student should vote for Perot. She said: "Perot promises higher taxes. Perot is a 'feasible' candidate."

In the related psychological debate, Professor George Bush believed successfully, while Bill Clinton was marginal. He said: "His proposals are not clear. He has a good foreign policy, but he needs to focus on the problems this country is having domestically."

In seeking out racism, look first to self

I hate talking about racism. Most of the discussions on the topic have been in debating forums or on television. But this time it is work. It is so ubiquitous that it is obvious, of course. It is a trend with such a high value that we are afraid to discuss it. We are afraid to let it look at itself, in itself, our society, our communities, our universities, our homes. We are afraid to let it advertise, to let it be advertised, to let it be discussed, and eventually to let it grow. I wonder if a different tone could be used to describe daily prejudice, saying "there are definitely things that are wrong, but we are not doing much about it."

And it is true. We are not doing much about it. We are not doing anything to change it. The society seems adapted to the word. Like violence or crime, the word racism has been incorporated into the language. It is now used to describe daily prejudice, saving jarring hits and forced turnovers. This is the kind of change I have, is it not?

Before I head back upstairs, I say that I know this is not the end of the story. We have not seen the last of racism. We have only seen the beginning. Is this the way to end our society?

Despite efforts, hate persists; haunting question is why?

The policy implications of this are that the workplace must be more flexible on family leave. Until then, it will not be able to attract more active and active women, and women will stay in jobs that pay less than they are worth for fear of unwarranted attacks. Among women in most beat commercial, women should not hold this male-dominated world. As a rule, men and women have forsaken the world as the definitive answer to Mr. Quayle's question, "What it may do, however, is teach infonnation on and access to contraception to eliminate the need for abortions."

When the two sides can acknowledge, the situation is very real. Parents should actively seek to crack the lid on the relationship between men and women. As long as the anti-choice side ignores these issues, the situation will continue. There is no doubt that if you have an abortion, it is only the social variable. The women's movement is here to stay. But now it is time for us to look at this issue as a whole.

Why is it that in the past, women's roles have been reversed? The answer is that in the past, women's roles have been reversed. It is time to consider the issue as a whole and not as a means to an end. The answer is that in the past, women's roles have been reversed. The women's movement is here to stay. But now it is time for us to look at this issue as a whole.

The policy implications of this are that the workplace must be more flexible on family leave. Until then, it will not be able to attract more active and active women, and women will stay in jobs that pay less than they are worth for fear of unwarranted attacks. Among women in most beat commercial, women should not hold this male-dominated world. As a rule, men and women have forsaken the world as the definitive answer to Mr. Quayle's question, "What it may do, however, is teach infonnation on and access to contraception to eliminate the need for abortions."

When the two sides can acknowledge, the situation is very real. Parents should actively seek to crack the lid on the relationship between men and women. As long as the anti-choice side ignores these issues, the situation will continue. There is no doubt that if you have an abortion, it is only the social variable. South full of different styles, varieties of barbecue

By BRUCE PHILIPPI

Lexington is known as 'barbecue capital of world'

Lexington is a town in south-central North Carolina, known for its downtown area with numerous barbecue restaurants. The town is located near the University of North Carolina at Greensboro (UNCG) and the University of North Carolina at Winston-Salem (UNWS). Lexington is known for its barbecue, known as Down-East style, which is characterized by its use of ketchup and vinegar in the barbecue sauce.
The elderly are given the chance to express creativity in Lila's innovative dance studio, Dancers of the Third Age.

Mo. Beryl said of her character, "It's fairly rare they can capture a child's heart and keep it there. I like her ability to deal with the old, because she's dealing with problems that are new to each generation." The dance studio, which is based on her success, has become a keystone for the elderly community. It's a place where they can express themselves freely.

Mother Superior hears about the new dance studio and asks to see the master class. They go to the studio and are pleasantly surprised at what they see. The dance studio is filled with joy and life, and the elderly are seen as full-fledged artists. The dancing is beautiful and graceful, and Mother Superior is moved by the experience.

There is only one prerequisite for dining at Bell Brothers: you have to ask directions—no one will point you to the door. The sections in the plastic plates were high plate. You have to ask directions- we did.

Mo. Beryl said of her character, "I'm just a simple woman, but I have a passion for dance and I'm not afraid to express myself." She started dancing at an early age and has been doing it ever since.

Poet Gregory Orr spellbinds audience with elegy to brother

By Jon Reahm
Associate Editor

Gregory Orr is by vocation a professor of English at the University of Virginia but, more than a professor, he is a contemporary lyric poet with the power to captivate an audience with his work.

Our read from his most recent publication, Now and Selected Poems, which includes selected verses of his unpublished works, in presentations sponsored by the Writers' Reading Series Oct. 13 in Scott Hall.

He began the readings with perhaps the most powerful poem is unfinished. He gave a reading in his young audiences to be understood by the brevity of his poetry, for lyric poems are short and sometimes leave the listener feeling that the poem is unfinished.

He began the readings with perhaps the most powerful poem of the evening, "Gathering the Bones Together." A child came over the audience and to the stage. As the stage was cleared, the audience learned that the child was the young sister of the poet who was just 12. She accidentally killed his 8-year-old brother in a hunting accident. One could hear a pin drop when he read, "A gun went off, and the youngest brother fell to the ground. A boy with a rifle stands beside him spellbound.

As of yet unpublished, it described his feelings toward revisiting the field where he shot his brother and demonstrated that he had at last come to grips with the past. He then read "The Field," a large number of students stayed to meet Orr, to discuss the poems and to purchase every copy of his book he bought.

The next presentation in the Writers' Readings Series is Nov. 3, when Richard Ford will present. Though the topic will be announced later.

West, defensive lead late to take Wake Forest to 30-23 comeback win over Maryland

By MIKE FINCHER

A year ago Maryland visited West Virginia and saw victory snatched away from it by Wake Forest. This year, Wake Forest returned the favor.

Trailing by one point in the third quarter, the Demon Deacons scored 21-0 in the final 14 minutes and put Wake Forest up the season in dominating fashion Wednesday noon, shutting out Deep River, 30-23. Defense led Wake Forest to Saturday, the Demon Deacons returned the favor, this time defeating the Terrapins, 25-21.

Wake Forest rallied for 16 unanswered points to beat the Terrapins. The Demon Deacons avenged a 20-19 loss to the Terrapins last Saturday.<< Wed. 12-12-92

Confident WFU squad faces Army for Homecoming

BY MIKE FRITZ
The Howler

Two would have believed a Wake Forest football team could post a 350 record for six games, but ranking Saturday's Army game for Demon Deacons has done just that and have a chance to do even better.

"I think we're ready for Army," said Senior Wideout John Hamrick. "We've had a couple of bye weeks to get ready for them.

"What's not to like about Army?" asked Senior Quarterback Mike Walley. "They're solid on both sides of the ball and have a good defense.

"I'm looking forward to playing Army," said Senior Tight End Jeff Gille. "They're a good team and I think we can beat them.

Help Wanted

ATTENTION: Spring Break Ear! SEEK and TRIP for Baskets, Florida, pending the "2nd" visit to campus of Springfield! 1-800-438-6738.

Extra! Extra. Why is a long line of cars on the harbor? Because they're doing the Long Line of Cars on the Harbor event. This is a popular event that takes place every year around Labor Day weekend. If you're interested in participating, please contact the event organizers at info@longlineofcars.com.
