The Student Relations Committee proposed the creation of an inter-collegiate council. "Basically what we were trying to do is to make sure we got good feedback from the legislature before moving forward with a bill," said senator Tim McKeon, the Student Relations Committee co-chairman. McKeon reported to the legislature that the council would bring together representatives from the four groups on campus, potentially their conference and outside world. "I encouraged the them to come back in a week or two, said McKeon.

In another Student Senate Tuesday evening, the council would meet twice a semester and provide an open for communication in the time frame with optional meeting reports, according to McKeon.

During spring dating elections, all all about the communication process in a way to do this. We will bring us every month and allow us to hear not only individual opinions, but good group opinions, said McKeon. We will have a big issue in this semester. Any comments we have should be on things we appreciate," said McKeon.

In a series of informal votes, the General Assembly decided the inter-collegiate council was generally a good idea and that each group should be present. A majority should become the new body, which is a suggestion for funding. For the Student Council, it is a chance to get more media and hopefully we can continue this process," said McKeon.

Any new business, Campus Life co­chairwoman Chris Tyler announced that Student Senate has now listed the new body, the SBAC, in Page 3.

Fraternities’ efforts augment Brian Piccolo Fund

By Bron $Hawn

The amount of money in the Brian Piccolo Cancer Fund is increasing. Thanks to the efforts of the Alpha Sigma Phi and Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternities, the Brian Piccolo Fund is now larger than ever before.

Signatures were solicited by a group of students from both fraternities, and the funds raised will be used to help fight cancer.

According to Bron $Hawn, "students from both fraternities worked hard to raise money for the Brian Piccolo Cancer Fund. As a result, the Brian Piccolo Fund is now larger than ever before."

The funds raised will be used to help fight cancer and support those affected by this disease.

ROTC cadets successfully train, compete

By Michael R. Beane

It’s not often that students are encouraged to participate in unusual extracurricular activities such as the one held last weekend. Over 50 cadets participated in the two-day, field training exercise held at Camp Butner, eastern North Carolina. They were supervised by the ROTC cadre from the university, comptroller of the state, and numerous commissioned officers in the department of military science.

The exercise was designed to assess the knowledge and skills the cadets have acquired throughout the fall semester. Cadets were issued weapons and equipment to follow through on their knowledge and abilities necessary for the week’s operation.

The program began with class training in approach techniques such as radio and maneuvers. After class the cadets divided into three squads for Squad Tactical Reaction Assessment Courses, or STRACs. As part of their exercises, cadets were provided a variety of challenges; the events were different from one last year, and the major events were won by several different organizations. Delta Delta Delta was the winner, Alpha Delta Phi was the runner-up, and Delta Nu Delta placed third.

Pumpkin

This year’s version of Pumpkin was different from last year, as the annual event was sponsored by the Student Activities Committee. All of the activities would be held on the campus during the week leading up to the event. The pumpkin-growing season was shorter than last year, as the frost came earlier than expected. The final event was the costume contest, where the winner was decided by a vote of the audience.

SBAC allocations fail organizations' scrutiny

The Student Budget Advisory Committee's recommendation on the allotment of funds to 46 student organizations for the 1995-96 academic year has been met with mixed reactions from the groups, and it is a danger of which of them may rest with the groups themselves. The SBAC has also decided to use base allocations for the next fiscal year in part on how much of its funding was requested.

The theory behind this idea sounds simple: the more an organization contributes, the more they receive. This is a common practice in national funding, and it is a change of which the SBAC has taken note.

This proposition, however, is not so simple to apply. First of all, many organizations may not be able to contribute, due to the financial status of their members, and the SBAC is aware of this.

This is not to say that the SBAC is raising doubts about their organizations, but it does raise concerns about the decision-making processes of these groups. It is important for the SBAC to ensure that its funding decisions are fair and transparent.

This reasoning is solid, but it more than two thirds of the SBAC decisions may only rise in the coming year.

The primary problem with the political correctness movement is that it seeks to achieve a hollow equality of words. Political correctness is a necessary feature of any democratic society, but it has become a tool for the suppression of legitimate opinions and the restriction of free speech. This is a serious concern, and it is important for the SBAC to address it.

The news reached as a shocker across the Internet and was in a string of events, since the school district’s smoking policy and the university’s governing board’s decision to approve it are both actions that can be challenged for their legality under the law.

The news also had an impact on the university’s ability to attract and retain faculty and students, as well as its reputation for upholding ethical and moral standards.

It was also a reminder of the challenges that colleges and universities face in balancing the needs of students and faculty with the interests of the broader community.

The university’s decision to approve the smoking policy was met with widespread criticism, including from faculty, students, and community members.

University President announced that the school would be seeking alternative solutions to the smoking policy, including implementingSmokeFree Zones on campus, as well as exploring other options to reduce the negative impact of smoking on the university community.

The University President also acknowledged the importance of addressing the issue of smoking on campus, and pledged to work towards implementing policies that would help to promote a healthy and supportive environment for all members of the university community.

The university will continue to work on implementing SmokeFree Zones and other strategies to help reduce the negative impact of smoking on the university community, while also ensuring that the rights of faculty, students, and other members of the university community are protected.

Phish blows minds with amazing grace

By MICHAEL JONES

Tubbs Fishman (drums) and Page McConnell (guitar) are two of the biggest losses for the younger generation of Phish fans. But when the jam band returns to the UNC Coliseum to begin its fall tour on Thursday, they'll be greeted by a barrage of fans from the baby boomer generation who have been following the band since its inception.

"We've seen this band for years, and we've seen them grow and change," said Michelle Beach, a Phish fan who has been attending shows since the band's early days. "It's amazing to see how much they've evolved over the years."

Stump leads way at South Carolina Fall Invitational

by Scott Simms

The University of South Carolina's Stump, the country's largest fall invitational, provided some valuable early-season experience for the Demon Deacons men's squad.

The tournament, held on two courses totaling 26 holes, featured 14 teams, including some of the top programs in the country.

Stump, who finished 10th in the NCAA championships last year, led the team with a score of 214, which was good enough for third place among individuals.

Despite the strong performance, the Demon Deacons finished 10th overall, with a team score of 854.

Stump's top finish came in the final round, where he shot a 71, highlighted by a birdie on the par-4 17th hole.

"I felt like I played pretty well," Stump said. "I hit the ball pretty well, and I just needed to make a few more putts."
