Faculty awaits location decision

Some faculty members are apprehensive about the Institutional Planning Committee's forthcoming proposal to relocate some business and accountancy departments. The department will move from Wingate into the Fine Arts Center next fall, but only after the committee's recommendation is made. But those who favor the proposal concede it will result in disappointment. The decision may be made Tuesday, when the committee reviews a subcommittee report. The department is 100% committed, however, to the Fine Arts Center and will not move back to Wingate.

Fall fashion show features WF models

Melinda Jones, Staff Writer

Sweeping with a 50-year tradition of elegance, the Winston-Salem Shopping Center will hold a larger-scale fashion show this year. This show is sponsored by the student staff of the Winston-Salem Journal and will be held at 11 a.m. on Saturday, November 11.

This year, the models will walk the catwalk in the mall's gardens, and the runway will be decorated with flowers and plants. The fashion show will feature a variety of clothing designs, ranging from casual to formal. The models will include both male and female students from different colleges and universities in the area.

The fashion show is open to the public, and admission is free. The proceeds from the event will go towards the student activities fund of the Winston-Salem Journal.

Students rush for own it

Students rush to own their own pieces of art, ranging from jewelry to clothing. The rush is driven by the desire to have unique and personalized items that stand out from the crowd.

Private education needed to maintain diversity

The need for private education is increasing, and the cost of tuition is rising. Many students are finding it difficult to afford the high costs of education, especially when they are not eligible for financial aid.

Private education offers a more personalized and flexible education experience, allowing students to tailor their education to their own needs and interests. Additionally, private colleges and universities often have smaller class sizes, which can provide a more intimate and supportive learning environment.

Students face many challenges in maintaining diversity in their education, including financial constraints, academic pressures, and social isolation.

Students responsible for own insurance

Take a titbit in mind what you have to your name: money, mandate, refrigerator, radio, clothes, etc. What would happen if they were destroyed or stolen?

The university does not offer insurance on a student's personal property. This is a standard practice in colleges.

A good practice is to use a depreciation formula. Some firms offer full deductible on the homeowners policy.

Dave Goodell said there are usually several incidents a year in which the university can be proven negligent in some part of the case. The housing contract states that the student agrees to be liable for own insurance as a risk factor involved.

The only problem in the insurance is the fact that to purchase a policy the student must obtain the specific amount of the policy.

It's true that the university is in an administration and teaching staff that is permeated with a spirit of philosophy. I'll tell it all, and I'll tell it all to the people. And I'll tell it all to the people of Wake Forest.

Art at the university

I was glad to read in the Old Gold and Black that at least one student here shared my concern over the vandalism in Robert Marks's sculpture outside the Student Plaza Art Center. Since I was out of the country at the time of the destruction and installation of the sculpture, I have only heard about the vandalism. I have been told that the work has been restored and that the university'S role and indeed I would hope that we wouldn't put the university under any kind of financial commitment. However, I feel that it is terribly troubling to me to commission this work was an important step toward rectifying that situation. It also identifies Wake Forest as a University that supports and makes a commitment to the arts as a part of the evolution of modern sculpture. This is a significant step in keeping us on the cutting edge of the arts or art-related projects.

Those people who are so worked up over the vandalism should understand that the arts from a student perspective from the Student Union Collective, the student government, the Student Life Division, and the administration. But I believe there is no justification at all for the kind of vandalism that has occurred recently. But perhaps even more troubling to me is the mis-directed anger which has turned away from the positive aspects of the arts to the university. Since the vandalism, I have been glad to read in the Student Handbook said that supports and makes a commitment to the arts, that's my favorite. The Wake Forest Quad, the quadrangle, that's my favorite. Pablo Cruise!
Fall tour opens Tuesday at Wait Chapel

By Carol Galloway
To listen to the songs of Pablo Cruise is to be transported to a time when music was more than just sound; it was a journey through the emotions and experiences of the singer. The band's repertoire is a blend of barbershop harmonies and smooth rock, creating a unique sound that has earned them a loyal following.

The Lead vocals by Steve Price, Pablo and Ange are both married, and the band was formed in the ’70s by Price and his bandmates in Los Angeles. After working on the band’s “Middle Man” LP, the group was looking for a bass player, so they approached Pablo Cruise, who had just made it to the top of the charts with his single “One More Night.”

The band went on to release a string of successful albums, including “Out of the Blue,” which was released in 1981. The album featured singles like “One More Night” and “Turn the Page,” both of which became hits on the charts.

Today, Pablo Cruise is still active, performing at venues across the country. The band’s music continues to resonate with audiences of all ages, and their legacy as pioneers of the rock music genre is secure.

Complex culture entices
WF student, professor to study overseas
in exchange programs

Mary Belk Frederick

The study of Chinese language and culture was much more than an ordinary college course this summer for Wake Forest professor Sharon Taylor and associate professor of history Michael Sinclair. Taylor and Sinclair were both students in intensive language and exchange programs at two Chinese universities. Taylor, one of a group of 11 students, studied at a top Chinese university, Shanghai, from the beginning of June until August.

The group spent 23 days touring China by trade with their program, which was sponsored by the Council of International Educational Exchange. Taylor was chosen by the CIEE, a private, New York City based program, after taking an oral and written test. Taylor had taken two years of Chinese at Wake Forest and also had toured China the year before with her parents. Sinclair had studied in China in 1983. This summer he studied under the auspices of the International Educational Exchange, a private language-orientation program in Guilin.

The group consisted of 11 people of different ages and different degrees of language skills. Weekly classes began as early as 8 a.m. or 8:30 a.m. and went on until 4 p.m. or 5 p.m. From 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. on alternating days, the students were free to practice what they had learned.

"It turned out to be a four-hour affair," Sinclair said. "It was quite a haul.

The party, complete with tarts, salads, and two birthday cakes, was set on either side of the Chinese people. "It was as if the Chinese language was "not much harder, just different" from other languages.

"We were very serious about our studies. The Chinese students are not stuffy or haughty, and they spend a lot of time on sports. But they are more serious than the average American college student seems to be," Taylor and Sinclair had many opportunities to meet the Chinese people. They were other Chinese, which was sponsored by the International Educational Exchange, a private language-orientation program in Guilin.

The Chinese family expressed their friendship to Sinclair when they held an elaborate birthday party in his honor.

"It's quite a haul.

Taylor and Sinclair agreed on the ever-growing acceptance of the Chinese people. "If you'd get me to study overseas," Sinclair said. "It seems to me that the Chinese are actually open and warm. Men and women often were seen walking arm in arm together in the streets, and the people did not hide their emotions.

"The Chinese had presented ideas about Americans, also. "They had never had Americans there for the summer," Taylor said, "so they had very limited opinions on how Americans would act.

"We were sometimes met by a warm-hearted group of students and professors. The faculty of the two universities would give their group of students a tour around the campus in the early morning hours, and many of them were crying. We were seen as special guests, and were treated with respect.

"It just means that the American culture is more round and full of life," Taylor said. "The Chinese culture is more round and full of life."
Selfishness underlies dorm opposition

Through the magic of state's arts technology, a football coach can sit in front of a $200 pizza oven in the middle of Texas and watch the Wake Forest football team from Texas play "Turns out the lights..." in a heated town from Missouri. That's progress for you. It's amazing what it can do.

However, the progress is unwarranted and wrongly sponsored, but also unavoidable. Like it or not, society gets stuck with it and has to learn how to deal with it.

In October, the ACC announced that a new dormitory will come to the Wake Forest athletic department. According to sources, the new dormitory will be for male scholarship athletes. It seems that someone has failed to uphold the ACC's promise that the University of Maryland would have full equal rights as a member of the ACC.

The time has come to consider the long-range implications of the new dormitory and what it will mean to the Wake Forest football team. As can be expected, many things hit the fan. It appears that the placement office appears to be really making a right decision. 'It's a typical NCAA punishment,' said one Wake Forest fan. "It's just like they're treating us like the school is nothing more than a small community of people who are interested in having a good time."

The NCAA is a business organization which is owned by its members. As in so many other seemingly reunital issues, money is a key element. Money has made people very emotional, although, especially when they have lost it.

However ugly and unfair it may sound, most people have to be realistic about this. That's life.

Injuries to play key role against Terps

There is no way to overstate the importance of Terps. It is very difficult to overlook the fact that the Terps have been dominant in recent years in the ACC. They have won three of the last five ACC championships and have made it to the ACC Championship Game in each of those seasons.

However, the Terps do have some key players out of the lineup. Wide receiver Todd Brown has been a consistent threat for the Terps, but he is currently out with an injury. Tailback Mike Smith is another big player for the Terps, but he is also questionable for this game.

The Wake Forest defense will have to contain these players and limit their impact on the game. They will need to pressure the quarterback and force turnovers to have a chance at victory.

The Wake Forest offense will also need to step up their game against the Terps. They will need to protect the quarterback and control the clock to keep the Terps off the field.

The Wake Forest soccer team got two goals from Mark Blackman and a third from Bobby Erlandsen as the Deacons defeated St. John’s 2-0 in a nonconference game Tuesday afternoon.

Baldinger was quoted in the article that "We were just trying to play well and not worry too much about the score. We just wanted to get back into the rhythm of things after the long break." Baldinger said.

The wins raise the Deacons’ record to 3-0. The Deacons’ next game is scheduled for Saturday against Wake Forest at Wake Forest University. The Deacons are currently ranked 18th in the country.
