Gay and Lesbian Support Group Gives Students Chance To Voice Problems

By Mike McKinley & Julie Riedewald

The Gay and Lesbian Support Group has announced that "Some people are so narrow-minded they don't see anything wrong with being gay" because that's all they see.

"They look at me and think I'm just some othersl... but in reality, I'm a gay person," said one member.

"But they don't see that because they're so narrow-minded," said another.

Another member said, "The only thing I see is that I'm gay, but they don't see that because they're so narrow-minded."

Counseling Center Starts New Program For Kids of Alcoholics

The Adult Children of Alcoholics (ACOA), a new support program sponsored by the University Counseling Center, meets weekly for Wake Forest students. Coordinator Amanda Zabel said, "This group provides support for students who have come from "alcoholic homes." It allows people from ACOA families to meet, share problems, and support one another."

The Children of Alcoholics Foundation (ACOA) focuses on one of eight Americans grows up in a home with alcoholic parents. Over 60% of alcoholics children could also develop drug and alcohol problems. The counselors learned much of their information about the social problem and its significance from a pamphlet by Christina Parker, which is now available in the Counseling Center.

of eight, Wake Forest's department of physics has developed a research program, one of only a handful in the nation. The program is designed to provide a solid foundation for students who are interested in pursuing graduate study in the field. The program is currently accepting applications from interested students.

Only about four other laboratories are comparable in research endeavors and educational philosophy. These programs are offered at the University of California, Berkeley, Harvard University, and the University of Chicago.

The department of physics at Wake Forest has been fortunate in that its faculty has been able to attract some of the nation's best physicists. The professors currently on the faculty are all highly regarded for their research and teaching abilities. The department has received grants from the National Science Foundation and other agencies of the federal government to support its research activities.

The department of physics at Wake Forest has recently begun to develop a stronger relationship with other disciplines, such as mathematics and engineering. This collaboration is expected to result in new opportunities for students interested in interdisciplinary studies.

The facilities of the physics laboratory are state-of-the-art, allowing students to conduct experiments that are comparable to those performed at major research institutions. The laboratory is equipped with the latest laboratory equipment, including high-speed computers and advanced data acquisition systems.

The department of physics at Wake Forest is proud of its contributions to the field of science and of its dedication to providing a high-quality education for its students. The department is committed to preparing students for careers in physics or related fields, and to contributing to the advancement of knowledge in the field of science.

CROSSING THE COUNTRY

By Shirley Mills

When Polite and Martin set off to cross the country this summer, they were a little apprehensive about their chances of meeting up with people interested in relations with the American people. People are very busy, and a lot of them have really pressures and problems. "It's a sociological study on the Bush administration's crime policy," Polite said. "We're interested in relations with the American people, and we're interested in meeting up with people who can help us get a feel for what's going on in the country." Martin, on the other hand, was more optimistic. "I've heard a lot about the American people, and I've heard that they're interested in meeting up with people who want to talk to them," he said.

The questionnaire was designed to promote an open-minded discussion about the state of the nation. Polite and Martin were interested in meeting people who were interested in the results of their survey, pictures from the trip and daily journals to get a feel for what's going on in the country.

Lorand Tóth, a researcher at the Center for the Study of Homosexuality, has focused his research on the relationship between homosexuality and the way in which individuals associate with others. His work suggests that there are two main categories of individuals who are more likely to associate with others who are also gay—those who are gay and those who are straight. The latter category is more likely to associate with others who are gay because of the way in which they view their own identity. This is supported by the fact that those who identify as gay are more likely to associate with others who are also gay than those who identify as straight.

However, it is not just the way in which individuals view their own identity that influences their association with others. It is also the way in which others view their identity that influences their association with others. This is supported by the fact that those who identify as gay are more likely to associate with others who are also gay than those who identify as straight.

In conclusion, it is clear that there are two main categories of individuals who are more likely to associate with others who are also gay—those who are gay and those who are straight. ### Letters to the Editor

Stallings Prejudiced

On Monday of last week the office of university affairs issued a statement addressing the topic of "Black and the Club." I am not sure what message they wanted to convey, but I do not think that it was a good message.

There are a number of concerns that I have about this statement. First, the statement is not clear. It is not clear what the university is trying to say. Second, the statement is not consistent. It is not consistent with the university's policies on discrimination.

In conclusion, I believe that the university should retract this statement and issue a new one that is more clear and consistent with the university's policies on discrimination.
We had been from a school that both worked the underclass and helped the upperclass in their pursuit of higher learning. The divide was stark, as were the expectations for the two groups.

I was never in the upperclass. I was always in the underclass. During my time there, I had no idea how to get through school, how to study, how to write, how to apply. I was always looking over my shoulder, wondering how I would ever make it through.

One day, I had a conversation with a teacher. I told him about my struggles, and he said, "You know, I used to be in your shoes. I didn't know how to do anything." He gave me some advice, and I followed it. It helped me through school, and it taught me how to be successful.

It's true. I think everyone goes through this at some point. It's part of the learning process. But it's important to remember that you're not alone. There are others who have been there before you, and they are here to help you.

So, if you're feeling lost or overwhelmed, just remember that you're not alone. There are people who have been in your shoes, and they are here to help you through. You can do it. You're not alone.

Wilson was covering our passing plays very tight. We couldn't have run it, because it wasn't a good game for us.

He also ran for 15 yards on five carries. Williams led the rushing attack for Wake Forest's football team tied 7-0.

Wake Forest opened the scoring on the first play of the game when Williams ran 7 yards up the middle and into the end zone, and Ron Lambert kicked the extra point.

Rice's first possession of the game came to an end when tailback sophomore Randy Jordan was tackled by Wake Forest's defensive tackle Reese at the Wake Forest 45 yard line but turned the ball over on downs.

Wake Forest's quarterback Phil炳worth was 7 for 15 against Southern Methodist. Tailback Anthony Williams led the rushing attack for the Demon Deacons, carrying the ball 17 times for 91 yards.

Humorous Foreigner Plays to Sell-Out Crowd

By Julie Boutwell

In a wailing line of 55 people, the Wake Forest University Theater produces of "The Foreigner," its second show of the fall season.

The comedy, written by Benjamin Elton, dates from the 1960s and involves the misadventures of a country man, "Frogman," whom they think is a foreigner.

Michelle Mays plays the part of character "Frogman," who, for engaging in conversation with the owner's wife, was brought to the estate of the newlyweds where he found himself acting as a butler.

"Frogman" is befuddled by the queries that his new employers have for him, and is quick to resolve any queries he has with their voice inflection and with a quick smile.

It is the difficulty of trying to make sense of any English spoken by the people of the estate that makes it seem as though anyone in the audience were a foreigner.

Owen, another character who could have been interpreted easily as a foreigner, is played by Barry, a second-year drama student from Santa Clara, Calif., subtitles that answer in English.

Campus-wide Cable Installation Tops Wake Radio's List

By Nancy Hayman

Wake Radio's 550 AM is coming up bigger and better this year.

The station, which has been in service for nearly seven years, is playing progressive rock, which reminds listeners of the radio they may have heard in high school.

In addition to music, Wake Radio provides campus news, sports information and weather reports, as well as frequent giveaways.

The station will include these important facts in their new programming.

By Richard Gantt

The Foreigner was portrayed too shallowly, is played well by Owen, another character who could have been interpreted easily as a foreigner.

According to Mr. Dictionary, "foreign" means that "of or of a country other than one's own." Therefore, two main characters have never been portrayed as foreign in Wake Forest's wake up.

Nancy Hayman, the producer, describes the Foreigner as an "Englishman who can't stand people and is always in a hurry." For this reason, the Foreigner is often seen as a foreigner, but is actually an Englishman.

The Foreigner is not a foreigner, but is actually an Englishman.

The Foreigner, a character who sometimes seems apathetic, will be played by Barry, a second-year theater graduate from Santa Clara, Calif.

Intense Writer's Block

Mike Brenner

Sometimes there is one example which makes an entire story. This is the case with "The Foreigner," which is a story of a man who is forced to live with the people of the estate. Although this may sound trite, it is not the case. The man who is forced to live with the people of the estate is a character who is forced to be a foreigner.

I would also like to add that I have a certain amount of respect for the people of the estate. They are good people and I think they have a lot to offer.

The Foreigner is a man who is forced to live with the people of the estate. Although this may sound trite, it is not the case. The man who is forced to live with the people of the estate is a character who is forced to be a foreigner.
