Students indicted for teller card fraud

By Brad Dixon

Two sunbaked students and a former student were indicted last week on bank fraud charges because they used phony checks and automated teller machines to steal money from Wachovia Bank of North Carolina.

Laurie Beth Baker, of Winston-Salem, Angela Harris, of Milton, and Nedu Okogie, all of Greensboro, Poha, were indicted by a federal grand jury June 29 and were held without bond.

Steven Mims, an assistant United States attorney who is handling the case, said the three are wanted on 51 counts and face a maximum of 50 years in prison and a $1 million fine.

Baker, 24, who was arrested on June 14, is accused of writing 30 phony checks totaling more than $1,000 from an account she fraudulently opened in January. She also faces a second indictment on fraud.

In a separate case that was announced last week, two students, including one basketball team member, were indicted for their roles in a series of credit-card thefts.

The indictment says they write checks for $500 from their accounts and charge off two or more other accounts, each for more than $1,000 or more than 30 checks to totaling, 3,040.

Buck Bayliff, the director of the Bowman Gray School of Medicine.

"The Pennsylvania state legislature and Congress felt something needed to be done to prevent the stealing of checks, so we put together a plan," said Regina Lawson, the director of the Bowman Gray School of Medicine.

University officials are still working with police to determine the extent of the damage.

Students study dieting attitudes

Thesis investigates relationship between parents', children's views

By Natalee Germain

According to a study in the spring of 1991, young girls in the fourth grade have already adopted their mother's attitudes toward dieting and weight gain. Nicole Ruther, a junior psychology major at Wake Forest University, is currently conducting a study on this topic. In psychology, she noted that 50 percent of young girls in the fourth grade feel if they weigh more than they should or more than they want to weigh. This summer, four students in a child development class with Professor Elizabeth Peterson will help Ruther with the study's data collection.

Ruther believes that the daughter of a dieting mother is more likely to report feelings of guilt associated with eating and awareness of eating habits. The mothers were also questioned about their level of restraint they practiced concerning their children's eating habits.

Ruther's subjects were asked about dieting and weight gain in research among the daughters of those mothers that practiced high restraint but found psychometric validity about eating and dieting. However, the sons of mothers that practiced high restraint showed no sign of guilt associated with eating and the daughters may adopt attitudes more similar to that of their parents because they identify with their mothers' attitudes.

Ruther has an interest in "the development of eating attitudes in young girls and how this may influence her future behavior." Dieting and weight gain are often an aspect of eating attitudes that develop later. However, Ruther said that the study does not give any evidence for the origin of eating disorders that develop among adults.

Preliminary results of Ruther's study indicate that the daughters of mothers that practiced high restraint have low psychometric validity about dieting and eating, while those of mothers that practiced low restraint have very high psychometric validity about dieting and eating. Ruther also hopes the study will eventually lead to more research on the relationship between girls and their attitudes toward weight and eating.

Although students in Pennsylvania want to receive security reports in their college towns a few years ago, this is the first year that the school is able to do so. Counts annually, reports distributed in the fall, are the first university to receive these reports in a timely manner.

The requirements of the report will change each year and students are expected to keep records of crimes classified on their campuses. If they have not already done so, they should begin.

A more detailed summary of campus crime obtained at Wake Forest may be found in the endnotes.

Although Eckert said that the security report tells the students that they must take personal responsibility for their belongings, he also encouraged them to prevent crime. "The report will ensure that students that they must take personal responsibility for personal belongings and themselves, so that the schools' reputations, and that of Wake Forest University, will not be damaged in the area where we live," he said.

Awareness of the security report should increase, as it "will provide an understanding of what the crime situation is," Eckert said.

Learning Assistance Program and Writing Center improve study habits

By SHARON McGEHAY

It is the third week of your annual calculus class. Four times a week, as a homework approach, you and your best friend study in your dorm room over your blueprints. What began as mental algebra has become the stuff of which nightmares are made and started to haunt your dreams.

The words of your professor are carried down to you and become more muddled with each passing hour. As you try to make sense of your notes, you begin to realize that your mind is slipping back into the past.

LAP is an extension of the Counseling Center that follows a counseling model but is designed to focus on academic skills and weaknesses. Services are open to students who want to improve their study habits and grades.

It is open Monday through Thursday from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. and from 2 to 5 p.m. and Friday from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. These services include individual academic skills counseling, computer programs and computer software tutorials.

As a counseling service, LAP offers special services for the learning disabled as well. Chadwick works with all students, but in a one-to-one setting.

LAP emphasizes the need for study skills because "if it’s not working, you should be doing something different rather than simply doing more of what you’re already doing." Based on the test and interview results, two or more sessions may be scheduled. Students will be determined to increase reading speed, improve organizational skills, or develop a study schedule. The goals will be specific, measurable and attainable and will be agreed upon by Chadwick and the student.

As a counseling service, LAP offers special services for the learning disabled as well. Chadwick works with all students directly in order to determine their strengths while remedying weaknesses. In cases where special course accommodations are needed, the counselor will serve as an advocate between the student and the faculty members of the class.

The LEARNING DISABILITY must be documented, and a Bureau of Education for the Handicapped report or similar documentation of the types of successful students the student has compared to is required. The student will then work with the counselor and the student will be assigned a counselor who will work with the student. Chadwick said that LAP works with the entire spectrum of students, from first-year students to seniors.

MOTIVATION IS THE KEY to success, Chadwick said. "As long as students are willing to work and change, they will find improvement in their study habits and reach their unreachable goals." Chadwick said it is not uncommon for students to improve their study habits and simply doing more of what they’re already doing.

LAP recently received approval from the National Office of College Reading and Learning Associations and is now able to certify their tutors. Tutors are then able to sign up to be paid part-time through what is called the tutor registry.

At this point you realize extra help, a tutor perhaps, might lead to dialogue with the faculty concerning ways to reach students. LAP recently received approval from the National Office of College Reading and Learning Associations and is now able to certify their tutors. Tutors are then able to sign up to be paid part-time through what is called the tutor registry.

Two workers at the Learning Assistance Program, tutor-training coordinator Caroline Talbert and counselor Molly Harrington, go over files.

Others, who are interested in being a tutor, should come to the Learning Assistance Program and computer programs available include speed reading, vocabulary, and reviews for math, science and foreign languages. Available are programs for scores improvement.

"The best time to start a car at night is a heavy fog. 'You can see only 10 yards ahead of you, but you can make the whole trip that way,'" Chadwick said.

Dear Mom and Dad,

I am currently writing home to simply announce that I am well and have been doing lots of work. I have been doing some research into academic administration. This would have been sad if not for the fact that I have been doing a lot of reading on the subject. I have also been working on my dissertation, which has been going well so far. I have been working with the Department of Political Science, which has been very helpful. I have been meeting with my advisor, Dr. Johnson, who has been very supportive. I have also been working on my course work, which has been challenging but enjoyable.

I have been spending a lot of time in the library, which has been quite crowded. I have been working on my research project, which has been going well so far. I have been working with some other students on a group project, which has been very helpful. I have also been working on my thesis, which has been going well so far. I have been meeting with my advisor, Dr. Johnson, who has been very supportive. I have also been working on my course work, which has been challenging but enjoyable.

Unite to send frivolous times to the devil

Carla Fachmann

olved: there are innumerable difficulties in the interpretation of this statement, arising from the height of frivolity and ambiguity of its words. For one thing, the term 'frivolous' representation of itself as the behalf of the Devil, as a in this respect is an aspect of the incoherence of the text.
The nefariousness of this statement is manifest in its height and frivolity, and in the ambiguity of its words. For another thing, the term 'frivolous' is a difficult concept to interpret, as it is a term that is often used in a figurative sense, and its meaning is dependent on the context in which it is used. The term 'frivolous' is often used to describe something that is trivial or unimportant, or that is lacking in substance or depth. It is also often used to describe something that is not taken seriously or is treated in a carefree or superficial manner. In the context of this document, the term 'frivolous' is used to describe the sentiment of the document, which is one of carefree and superficial thinking.

Howard's show romance of past

By Mary Elizabeth Mann

Within gazing women -ope of the most perilous moments, Howard's show uses the incredible dramatic tension of the scene to highlight her unique character. Her voice is the perfect match for the tragic, romantic, and emotional aspects of the story.

The opening number, "Waiting to Exhale," sets the stage for the rest of the show. Howard's character, Vivian, is depicted as a strong, independent woman who is searching for love and fulfillment. The song is a powerful exploration of the themes of love, loss, and redemption.

Howard's vocal range and emotional depth are on full display throughout the show, as she delivers a series of powerful performances that are both stirring and moving. Her acting is equally impressive, as she immerses herself completely in her role and brings a sense of realism and authenticity to the characters she portrays.

The show's production values are also noteworthy, with stunning set designs and a visually stunning cast. The use of lighting and projection is particularly effective, creating a sense of depth and immersiveness that enhances the overall theatrical experience.

Overall, Howard's show is a must-see for fans of the genre and for anyone who appreciates powerful storytelling and emotionally resonant performances. The show is a testament to the power of the performing arts and a celebration of the human spirit.

D.J. Campbell. Although Campbell had two key闪光 moments against the Wolfpack (12-15, 23-yard punt), the kick was bad. It turned out to be his last as a Deacon.

"He's not great throwing the football," Jackson said excitedly. "You get 30 different kicks flying. That's what he did." He said 15 of 16 punts were stronger.

D.J. Campbell's brother, an Arizona punter, is named Alex.
