Few Students Attend Tuition Answer Session

By Joyce Mayes

Two students—eigilt members of Student Government and two editors from the Old Gold and Black—attended the question-and-answer session Thursday about the $1,500 tuition increase with John A. Anderson, the vice president for planning and policy.

- Make Money, the president of SG, and Nick Mineta, the special coordinator for SG, said the community's lack of support for the tuition increase may have caused the low attendance, including the heavy presence of students, not as a result of the SG editors, but rather of the community's lack of support.

- "I don't think it's a lack of people who want to come to class. I think it's a lack of people who are willing to support us," Mineta said.

- Anderson also said he was not surprised that the community was not interested in the tuition increase.

- "I think the community has been very divided on this issue," he said. "I think that we've been very divided on this issue."
Academic Gatherings for W.J. Cosy Symposium

No one would be more surprised than W.J. Cosy that anyone would be happy about his death, in his last single work, The Mind of the South, according to the American Scholar, 1992. Cosy's hand is in it too.

The American Scholar, an associate professor of history at Duke University, has written a history of black Southerners in the South. "The Minds of the South, W.J. Cosy's Book,"

The South is not dead. It's just uncomfortable, according to Merle Black, professor of political science at Emory University. The South, he says, is "the final frontier" of American democracy.

Black said race matters in the South, and that "the South is not dead but it is not yet ready for its close-up." The South, he said, "is a place where people live in poverty and crime, he said.

Panel Examines Southern Politics

By Kelly Constant

The Democratic Party must work to rebuild the South back to regain its importance, according to the speaker at the panel discussion at the Student Newspaper, "Southern Studies Since 1913: Challenges for the Future," at the University of Miami in Miami, Florida.

"In the past, only 5 percent of Southern voters voted Democratic," he said. "In recent years, there has been a dramatic reversal in the voting patterns of the South." Black voters have been key in this reversal, according to the speaker.

The event was held in the Student Center. According to university officials, the event was attended by over 100 students, faculty, and staff.

Students Organize Protests, Groups In Response to Persian Gulf Crisis

February 13, 1991

The Persian Gulf crisis has triggered reactions and controversy both in the nation and on our campus. From marching in Washington, D.C., to the protest at the Quiz, Wake Forest students have expressed their feelings on the war, and especially their concerns about our nation's role in the war.

"We are people who usually take strong stands on moral issues, and we are concerned about the war," said one of the protestors. "We hope if we were open or concerned, other students feel the same way."

Tariq Said, a practicing Muslim, said many students expressed a need for a regular forum in which to express their thoughts, so the group decided to hold vigil every Tuesday at 10 a.m. on the Quad. The group met once to organize support and gather signatures for the war; it has been projected by students from both dorms.

"Students shouldn't feel guilty if they don't want to come," said Said. "We have to keep our minds open to their feelings."

Susanne Albrecht, a Delta Sigma Phi member who makes the trip (right), said she was surprised at how many people did. "Just the other week, we were talking about the draft issue and the reactions people are having. People talked about the war, but they didn't know what was happening.

"I think that's what people think happened in Vietnam, and we don't want that this time around," Said said.

Support for Troops Continues

Many students showed their continued support for the troops through various means. The Student Government held a banner-making event, which was attended by 1,000 students, "until further notice."

"We started this because people are concerned about what the troops are experiencing and what they've been doing," said Said. "We want to give the troops tangible evidence of the peace movement at our level of commitment, and we want to make them feel that we are here to support them." Said said.

"We're here every Tuesday night if they need us," Albrecht said. "It's a way for people to feel their thoughts.

"I was getting a lot of respect about the issue, people actually talking and saying that they felt the same way," Said said.

Support is also coming from other organizations, particularly in the week after the war began, the students in do rags to find that involved, he said.

He organized a discussion group Jan. 24 that 25 students attended. While these students in the meeting were out of the war, they did not wear their do rags to draw attention to the war.

Administrators Rob From Middle Class

We all have heard of Robin Hood, who stole from the rich and gave to the poor. But what about Robin Hood tradition? A group of students, in what may be a rare opportunity Thursday, decided to rob the administration of the hard-earned cash of student organization fees.

The group consisted of a student who was able to access the offices of the Student Government Association (SGA) on the second floor of Benson Hall. According to witnesses, the group was able to remove several thousand dollars worth of cash from various SGA offices. The stolen money was reportedly intended for student organizations to use for activities and events.

This act of theft raises several important questions. Why would students feel the need to rob their own organization fees? What does this say about the administration’s handling of student funds? And what does this say about the future of student organizations on campus?

It is unfortunate that this incident occurred, and it serves as a reminder of the importance of transparency and accountability in the management of student funds. The administration must take steps to ensure that such incidents do not occur in the future.

Don’t You Care?

John Adams, the vice president for administration and finance, has been on campus for less than six months, and he seems to have no idea what is happening on the financial front. Today, he invited the audience to join him at 11 a.m. for a tour of the administration offices.

It seems that Adams is not aware of the financial problems faced by many of our students. In fact, a recent study by the National Center for Education Statistics found that over 40% of college students report having difficulty paying for their tuition and other expenses.

If Adams is really interested in helping our students, he should start by addressing the financial challenges they face. This is not the time for him to be out on a tour of his own office. It is time for him to focus on the students, not himself.

Back to the Basics

In his recent column, my friend Bob Smith discussed the need for students to return to the basics of college education. He pointed out that too many students are focusing on extracurricular activities at the expense of their studies.

I completely agree with Bob. As students, we must take advantage of the opportunities we have to learn and grow in our studies. We cannot afford to let our extracurricular activities distract us from our academic goals.

Bob also mentioned the importance of spending time in the library. This is something that I definitely agree with. The library is a great place to study and learn. I encourage all students to use it more.

Sincere Gratitude

On behalf of my family and staff, I want to express our deep appreciation for the efforts of our team here at the university. The commitment and dedication of each and every one of you make our university a special place.

I am honored to have the opportunity to work with such a talented and hardworking team. Your efforts do not go unnoticed, and we appreciate your contributions to our university.

Great Loss

I am writing this letter with a weight on my heart. Our beloved coach, G. David Olson, passed away this past week. His loss is a great one for all of us.

Mr. Olson was a truly exceptional coach. He had a great passion for the sport and was known for his dedication to his team. He was a mentor to many, and his legacy will live on through the memories of those he touched.

We will miss him greatly, and our thoughts and prayers are with his family during this difficult time.

Although I dislike war and would very much like to see the open disrigated at the conclusion of the war.

The issue of war is not a matter of personal opinion, but of the well being of the whole of humanity. It is the responsibility of democracy to be brought for­

David Oguse was consumed in a 17th-century setting last week when he performed as a concert of music at the Student Union. As an associate professor of music, he joined by the students in the school of music and factory arts, the instruments of the period.

Mr. Oguse, who has been involved in the Baroque period, played the violin and several other instruments of that time, including the viola. He performed with tempos and style that are typical of the period, and his playing was praised for its clear and expressive sound.

After the recital, Mr. Oguse spoke to the audience about the Baroque period and its influence on music today. He also discussed the role of the court and the church in the development of the music of that era.

Mr. Oguse's performance was a wonderful reminder of the beauty and richness of Baroque music, and it was enjoyed by all who had the privilege of hearing it.
Mike Young, the founder of Forefront, has held a copyright on the name for its place in the business world, and this has caused a legal debate between the two labels. The conflict between Forefront N.J. and its rival label could become a long, expensive battle.

Mike has signed big-name religious artists to his label, and the controversy has raised questions about the impact on the music industry.

For example, the attention received by Mike's artists while on talk shows has not buy Forefront N.J. albums if they prefer Christian rock. This raises questions about the effectiveness of marketing strategies.

Urban Edge is based in New Jersey, and its label's claim to the name has been challenged by Forefront. Mike believes he is the original source, and the court case will determine the ownership of the name.

In conclusion, the legal struggle is not just about the name, but also about the future of the music industry. It's a hard-driving battle between local bands to see who will succeed in the competitive market.
