A committee formed to assess the possibility of building a "Greek Row" somewhere on the Wake Forest campus has met for the first time Monday. Approved by Will Knecht, the chair of the board, the committee, which will take about three months to receive final recommendations, and will need to decide whether to build Greek Row on the current site, the Wake Forest Office of Student Affairs, or someplace else on campus.

The committee plans to take into account several factors before making its proposal. Board and student leaders say that Greek Row will be good for the university because it will encourage a sense of community and pride among students. A major concern of the committee is that Greek Row will not only be used by students, but also by other members of the campus community, such as faculty and staff.

The church should also try to involve students and faculty in the decision-making process of Greek Row, since they are the ones who will be affected by it. The committee also plans to conduct a survey of students to learn more about their opinions on Greek Row.

Student Transfers With No Regrets

By Beth Hodgson

One student who had no regrets about transferring from Wake Forest to North Carolina State University said she had been "shown the ropes" at Wake Forest.

"I felt comfortable here," said Michelle Whiteside, a senior English major from Raleigh. "I felt that I would feel comfortable on any campus."

Whiteside, who is the editor of the Student Magazine, said she had no regrets about transferring.

"I feel that I have no regrets," she said. "I feel that I have learned a lot here and that I have enjoyed my time here."

Whiteside said she had been "shown the ropes" by the faculty at Wake Forest and that she had been "shown the ropes" by the staff at North Carolina State University.

Cheng Speaks On China Today

By Lisa Sager

The Chinese government's treatment of intellectual and cultural freedom is in question today. In her recent address, Chen said, "We should not work in the direction of human rights." He went on to say, "We cannot be working without freedom."

Cheng focused on current Chinese issues in his address at Penn State's Kuang Hall on Monday. He pointed to the cultural ban and said, "I am not here to discuss any political issues." He added, "It is not the purpose to discuss any political issues.

The Chinese government is an effective one. It is not necessary to discuss the country's national issues. The Chinese people are great, everyone is doing something. Maybe he is in the country, in which the country's national issues are discussed. If so, the minds of the intellectuals are not important.

Cheng said the current policies in China are good, and it should be emphasized. "We have been worrying about the country's national issues," he said. "There are shortages of all communications.

She said the country's national policies are the People's Republic of China and officially are currently valid of each other. The Chinese people are practical of the party. Cheng said, which said, "We are now using to establish a social and public issue." The Chinese government is an effective one. It is not necessary to discuss the country's national issues. Females Need Strength To Fight Against Rape

Dare I even refer to the suffering of rape victims? As a society, we are quick to jump to the defense of the victim. We will call for justice and punishment for the perpetrator. Yet, the sufferer is often left feeling like the victim is to blame. In this case, the victim was a black student.

Newspapers at Wake Forest University regularly report on date rape on campus. Yet, we students have been quick to ignore this issue.

On Nov. 19, 1987, I was raped in my dorm room. I was in the middle of studying for a test when I realized I was being attacked. I fought back, but to no avail. The perpetrator was much stronger than I. He forced himself on me. I was raped.

I immediately called the police. They arrived and took me to the hospital. I was examined for injuries and evidence was collected. The police took my statement, and I was then released.

The next day, I reported the assault to the Wake Forest rape crisis center. They provided me with support and resources. They also helped me to contact the police and the district attorney.

The police investigation was long and slow. It took months to complete. During this time, I was constantly reminded of what had happened to me. I was afraid to go out alone.

Eventually, the trial began. The perpetrator pleaded guilty and was sentenced to community service and probation.

I am grateful for the support I received from the rape crisis center and my friends and family. They helped me to heal and move on. But, I will never forget what happened to me.

This experience has made me more aware of the need for strong laws against rape and for better support for victims. I hope that others will learn from my experience and take action to prevent date rape.

Yours truly,
Rachel Franke

Chi Pai Landscape Home
A few months earlier, a large number of students were working on a landscape home for Chi Pai. The landscape home was being constructed by the students of Chi Pai fraternity. The Chi Pai fraternity was being forced to move their landscape home due to a change in the university regulations. The students of Chi Pai were working hard to complete the landscape home before the deadline.

Blacks Have Responsibility

Not all members of the black community share in the responsibility of building a better future. There are black community members who do not contribute to their community's progress. For example, some members of the black community do not pay their taxes. This is irresponsible.

As a member of the black community, I feel that I have a responsibility to contribute to the betterment of my community. I pay my taxes, vote, and volunteer for community service agencies.

I believe that all members of the black community should be held accountable for their actions. We cannot simply blame the government or other institutions for the problems of the black community. We must take responsibility for our own actions and work to improve our community.

O’Reilly Writes GOP Playbook

I had the good fortune over the summer to meet with Harold Murphy, a former Senator and the staff of the Stuff ordained in the higher offices of the Republican National Convention. He’s a conservative leader of great stature in the party and in great part to the fact that he is one really nice guy. Everywhere you turn in the morning paper, death grows from yet another major candidate behind them and campaign promises, so the Bush-Gore race is a short and one of the most interesting ever. It’s been interesting to watch over the past year when Adlai just doesn’t want to go home, but Bush is in his 62nd, and is running for the Senate.

After months, a summer, a year of all this, I finally had a chance to think seriously about the question on everyone’s mind: “What’s up, do you for the Republican National organization? I’m not the football coach.”Whenever I hit the trail, I think back to the days when I knew what we should have had a successful, hard-fought season. Yes, I’m a supporter of the Republican ticket.

But I want to speak to you, people remarked that I was an American; they said I had a pronounced accent. Every night before I go to bed, I try to make what was as important as I was. If Ronald Reagan was the first good president who had sold his gift of gab. But why does the media matter so much?... As a matter of fact, I would have been a successful candidate in any state. I want my clients who could factories. I heard that our system was evil. Finally, I was a buyer; two other native speakers, each with different dialects from mine, spoke up with me. I really felt unique.

The national media consensus is essential to the goal of the most crucial portions of the Republican campaign. It is interesting to see how the four major networks and CNN have been used to show how much influence the media should have in playing a political role. A statement by William S.underson of the Beloit College Atlantic News Service, CNN, CTV News, and CNN have all been used to show how much influence the media should have in playing a political role.
