The words "About 20 minutes" could be sophisticated Mike Moran's words too. The idea of a "mock trial" isn't new, but the idea of a "mock trial" featuring a court, jury, and all other traditional aspects of a court is new. The trial, which will be open to the public, will be held in the Student Union Center on Thursday. The trial will be conducted by the Judicial Board of the Student Government Association.

Sigma Chi Experiments With Bring-Your-Own-Beverage Policy

By Joseph Vauclus

Instead of slugging kooys of beer or wine parties last weekend, Wake Forest's chapter of Sigma Chi experimented with a Bring-Your-Own-Beverage policy. The fraternity members are considering changing their alcohol policy to a Bring-Your-Own-Beverage policy. The fraternity is trying to find a way to accommodate their members who do not drink alcohol.

Junior Travels to Soviet Union, Participates in New Model U.N.

By Stephen Buchanan

Junior David Bain traveled to Moscow recently to participate in a new model United Nations sponsored by the United Nations and the Department of State. The model United Nations was held on campus from Thursday through Saturday.

The committee met Saturday after the public hearing to consider final revisions. Kenneth Zick, the vice president for student life and community, said the committee tried to review all of the suggestions made by a body who attended the hearing by the old Judicial Council.

The summer lies of the reform proposal include the institution of the university's judicial system more explicitly than the present system. It says, "The Judicial Council's standards of community responsibility extend to circumstances in which students attend Wake Forest events, participate in off-campus educational and social programs, use University equipment, represent the University, or participate in any activity in which a student's identity is clearly associated with the name of the University."

Under the latest draft, an accused violator of University regulations will have the opportunity to review the case with the appropriate student officer.

In addition, students now have the right to appeal a Council hearing to the 9:00-10:40 time slot. For the charge exceeds 30 work hours and a $15 fine. Previously, a student had the right to appeal the Council hearing only if he had already been found guilty by the Dean of Student Services. Once those the appeal was filed, a provision was made for a hearing before the student's appeals board. The appeals board had the authority to suspend the student's appeal. If the vice president for students found the appeals board did not meet the standards, the appeals board is required to make the appeal.

In the draft, the defendant is given the right to refuse to answer questions, which, "If the student Judge, could subject the student to prosecution in a criminal case."

The composition of the Judicial Council was nonparty, nonfraternity, and had no connection to the Student Life Committee. The Judicial Council is subject to the approval of the Student Senate.

The renovation is Beijing's Tiananmen Square's last spring. It was planned to honor Chinese President Xi Jinping, who had visited the site for the first time in his presidency.

The renovation has been called politically dynamic for China's leaders, who want to showcase the site as a symbol of their rule.

WFD D raises $221,800 in Fund Drive

Old Gold and Black (Sunday, March 9, 1990)

WFD D, Wake Forest's public radio station, has raised $221,800 in its annual campaign, which ended March 8.

The total is 6 percent higher than the FM station's $209,700 goal for its 1989 campaign. WFD D is a non-commercial station and its programming is paid for by donations from listeners.

This is a thoroughly satisfying achievement, especially considering the fact that we have been reduced in recent years to broadcast only on Saturdays and Sundays.

The station's success can be attributed to the support of its listeners, who have contributed generously to the station's budget.

Contrairement to popular belief, good things do come in 3's.
WARSAW, Poland — Poland’s economic “black therapy” appears to be yielding results. There has been a sharp rise in the number of patients seeking money changing services, and some are even going to extreme lengths to get hold of foreign currency.

The director of a local currency exchange outlet, who wished to remain anonymous, said: “We are seeing an increase in demand, particularly among younger people. They are coming in with large sums of local currency and asking to exchange it for foreign currency.”

The official explained that the rise in demand was due to a combination of factors, including the improving economy, rising living standards, and increased travel. “People want to take advantage of the strong local currency and convert it into something more valuable,” he said.

However, he warned that the rise in demand was not sustainable and that the currency exchange market could become unstable if the trend continued. He urged people to be cautious and to consider the risks associated with holding foreign currency.

In other news, the government has announced plans to introduce a new tax on foreign currency holdings. The new tax, which will come into effect in the next quarter, will apply to all individuals holding more than $10,000 in foreign currency.

The move is aimed at discouraging people from holding large amounts of foreign currency, which the government believes is contributing to inflation. The tax will be calculated on the difference between the market rate and the exchange rate at the time of the transaction.

The government has also announced plans to introduce a new system for monitoring foreign currency transactions. The new system will require banks and currency exchange outlets to report all transactions over $1,000 to the authorities.

The government hopes that these measures will help to stabilize the currency market and prevent further speculation.

In related news, a new law has been passed that will make it easier for foreign investors to do business in Poland. The law, which was introduced by the government, will allow foreign investors to own up to 100% of Polish companies, providing they meet certain criteria.

The government hopes that the new law will attract more foreign investment to Poland, which could help to boost the economy and create jobs.

Overall, the government is optimistic about the future of Poland’s economy, and is working to make it more attractive to foreign investors.

ACOA Testimonies

After reading Janice York's article on ACOA on page 4, "A Pag by Pag," the march 3 issue of the Old Gold and Black, I was inspired to share my own ACOA experience with everyone. In college, I discovered that I was in fact dealing with codependency and that I had a drinking problem. I was ashamed to talk about it, but I knew I had to do something about it. I started attending ACOA meetings and found that I was not alone. I learned that I was not the only one dealing with these issues. I found a support group that understood me and provided me with the help that I needed. I am now in recovery and have found a new sense of hope. Thank you, Old Gold and Black, for publishing this article. It has made a difference in my life.

Greek Expansion

I am writing in response to criticism I have received about the article "Greek Expansion," which appeared in the March 3 issue of the Old Gold and Black, and I am somewhat disappointed. I believe the article has been unfair and inaccurate in its portrayal of the Greek expansion at Forest University. The article suggests that the expansion is only about money and power, and that the Greeks are only interested in gaining more power. However, I believe that the expansion is about more than just money and power. It is about giving students a chance to be part of something larger than themselves. It is about creating a community that is supportive and inclusive. I encourage you to read the article and form your own opinion.
Troop Reduction Next Step for NATO

A detailed one of our worst nightmares, the democratization movement is in full swing in the countries we would like to see a U.S. and NATO military presence. The real question is: How will the 28-member alliance respond to this new reality? The United States and NATO member countries must now consider what the implications of this new reality might be for their military strategies. If we are serious about promoting democratic values and institutions in Europe, we cannot continue to rely on our traditional military forces. The time has come for us to think about what kind of military role we want to play in Europe in the future.

Michael Harkness

Seventeen were addressed to the agreement, and with the current crop of politicians and journalists no one seems to be questioning the validity of our forces in Europe. But if we want to preserve the democratic gains that have been made in recent years, we must start thinking about our future military strategy.

Unfortunately, the original rationale of the European Community is still valid: to create a common market for the continent. The effects of this agreement on that common market are significant. By putting in motion a real reduction of forces in Europe, we can start to address the issue of how we can best contribute to the creation of a single market.

Eliminating U.S. and French forces from Europe should bring us closer to achieving this goal. The robust countries of Western Europe, France, and Great Britain are quite capable of recruiting sufficient defense forces by them- selves during this new era of East-West détente.

Furthermore, all of Europe would greatly ap- preciate a comprehensive security regime with the last nagging shadow of nuclear weapons.

The far-sighted operators in the U.S. have already recognized this opportunity. In a speech last week, President Reagan suggested that we should not take for granted our ability to influence the outcome of this policy. The larger negotiating nations of Japan, West Germany, and France have already agreed to some form of agreement and are likely to join in a broader effort.

In my view, this agreement should be seen as a step in the right direction. It is a first step in the right direction. It is a first step in the right direction. It is a first step in the right direction.

A panorama among the loccations due to society not consecutively bonding, containing organizational aspects (1990) becomes more meaningful, fairly active, and not a 30 minute run. KAs and Sigma Pis have started new traditions, all emphasizing community service, and the last step in rebuilding these groups was to reestablish the KAs. Following Southern Tradition

gington and later in the 1970s, making the fraternities and especially the fraternity chapter. The KAs and Sigma Pis have started new traditions, emphasizing the importance of community service in rebuilding these groups. The KAs have started a program called KAs Against Sexual Harassment, which involves training and informing members on how to prevent and respond to sexual harassment. They also have a community service program, where members participate in various service projects in the community. Sigma Pis have started a chapter in 1990, focusing on community service and involvement. They have a chapter in Washington, D.C., which involves participating in various community service projects and mentoring young people. Both fraternities have started new traditions, emphasizing the importance of community service in rebuilding these groups.

An unusual and prescient conservation of life of M. Miller (sporadic E. Laskin), and more to the point, this one-act play, "A Night With Mrs. de Tanka," directed by Joel Vescio and performed at the Little Coliseum, is a masterful exploration of the Holocaust and its aftermath. Through the eyes of a survivor, the play offers a raw and intimate examination of the experiences of a young Jewish girl who was sent to an orphanage during World War II. The play, directed by Joel Vescio, is a powerful depiction of the horrors of the Holocaust and the resilience of the human spirit.

The play is set in a small German city during World War II, and it follows the story of a young Jewish girl who is sent to an orphanage to escape the Holocaust. The play is divided into two sections, the first of which is a series of taped interviews with the survivor, and the second is a play adaptation of the survivor's story. The play is performed by a cast of four, with the survivor being played by actress Amy Heifetz. The play is a powerful exploration of the experiences of a young Jewish girl who was sent to an orphanage during World War II, and it offers a raw and intimate depiction of the horrors of the Holocaust and the resilience of the human spirit.

The play's director, Joel Vescio, is an accomplished actor and director who has worked on numerous productions in the region. He is known for his ability to bring out the best in his actors and for his innovative and creative approach to directing. He has directed a number of productions in the region, including "The Drowsy Chaperone," "The 39 Steps," "A Chorus Line," and "The Importance of Being Earnest." Vescio is a respected figure in the local theater community, and his work is highly regarded by both critics and audiences.
