Libraries Lays Off More than 50 Student Workers

By Steven Miles
Assistant News Editor

Robert B. Tipton, director of the university's libraries, laid off 50 part-time workers and reduced the work hours of others, effectively reducing the library's full-time equivalent staff by 27 positions. Tipton, who oversees the library's budget and personnel, said the move was necessary due to a significant decrease in library usage. He added that the decision was not made lightly and that he had considered other options before deciding to lay off workers.

The cuts, which took effect April 15, resulted in the reduction of 27 full-time equivalents and the elimination of 23 part-time positions. The cuts will affect both the main library and the branches, with the main library losing 18 full-time equivalents and the branches losing 9.

The layoffs are part of a broader effort to reduce the library's budget, which has been hit hard by cuts to the university's overall budget. The library's budget has been reduced by 10% in the past year, and Tipton said that the cuts are necessary to ensure the library's long-term viability.

The layoffs were announced to library employees on April 15, and Tipton said that the decision was made with the goal of minimizing the impact on employees. He added that the library is committed to providing support to employees who are affected by the layoffs.

Efforts to increase the average salary of professors on the Reynolda campus are gaining momentum, with the university considering awarding professors a merit salary increase.

The university is considering the possibility of awarding professors a merit salary increase, which would be based on their performance. This is in response to a national trend of increasing average salaries for professors, with professors on the Reynolda campus currently earning an average salary of $75,000.

The university's Board of Visitors recently discussed the possibility of awarding professors a merit salary increase, and the university is expected to make a decision on the matter in the near future.

Students Spend Spring Break Working for Habitat

Wake Forest students worked with a mix of 60 students from five other colleges, including the University of Richmond, Berkeley, and Harvard.

The group did extensive work on the roofs, walls and siding of a new house. They also dug a foundation for a trailer slab, installed a new door and window in another trailer, built a storage shed and moved building materials.

Carteret has a school, church, one small grocery store and a gas station. A major property owner, 40 miles away, is planning to expand the area of the town with "no measurable density." "Many people are out-of-town farmers, but the land is not good enough in place anything worthwhile," she said. Most homes are bungalow, a few have sunrooms and porches, and a common sight. Senior Maria Rogers noted that many homes had running water but no sewerage. According to Rogers, the family income of the town ranges from $5,000 to $10,000 and is confined to farmers and their families. This kind of vandalism the Students are spending a great deal of time and money on the project.

Proposed Judicial Reforms Jeopardize Student Rights

It is no secret that the Wake Forest Judicial System is in need of reform. That fact was loudly driven home to the Student Body in fall 1989.

In the wake of the blasted foundation, the administration formed a committee to address the problems of the Judicial System. Any reforms would have to address the fact that vendors, who used to be counted on to make the system work, are no longer interested in doing so.

The committee, however, has found some areas of agreement. They have yet "pulled the filth" from the Judicial System. Their recommendation calls for a reorganization of the Judicial System.

The best way to clear up the mess is to get rid of the Judicial System as we know it. The current system is not only inefficient, but it is also unfair to students.

The proposed reforms are as follows:

1. The Student Body will elect five judges to preside over the Judicial System. These judges will be non-student members of the Wake Forest community.
2. The Judicial System will be abolished and replaced with a new system that will be more responsive to the needs of the students.
3. The new system will be more fair and equitable, and will provide a better method for resolving disputes.

We believe that these reforms will go a long way towards improving the Judicial System at Wake Forest. We urge the Student Body to support these reforms, and to work towards a better system.

Asian Actress Addresses Stereotypes

By Karen Zador
One Grand View Atrium

Giving up as an Asian-American is difficult. As a result of myriad experiences with racism, Asian-Americans have the right to refuse to be defined by their race. This happens to me every single time someone tries to define me as an Asian-American.

For Joa Nara, a first-generation Japanese-American, the fight against stereotyping becomes both personal and professional. That was why she rejected the role of an Asian-American character in her school musical when offered to her, as she had the chance to make her own role a reality.

"I decided not to accept," she said.

Joa's story isn't unique, as many Asian-American actors have been denied roles, but it is a testament to the power of self-empowerment. On Good Friday and Saturday at 8 p.m., the Ring Theatre will host the Los Angeles premiere of "Killer Diller," a film produced by the Japanese-American actress, Joa Nara, who portrays a young woman who defies the Japanese-American stereotype.

The film, directed by Wesley Benfield, is a satirical look at the lives of Japanese-Americans. Nara's character, a young woman who defies the stereotype, is a refreshing change to the usual portrayal of Asian-Americans.

"I wanted to show the audience that Asian-Americans can be as complex and diverse as anyone else," Nara said. "I also wanted to show that we can be just as funny and talented as anyone else.

Nara has been fighting for equal representation in Hollywood for years, but it has been a challenge. She said that she has had to work harder than anyone else to get the roles she wants.

"It's not easy being an Asian-American in Hollywood," Nara said. "People think we're all the same, but we're not. We're all individuals, and we deserve to be treated as such.

With her film, "Killer Diller," Nara is proving that she is a talented and versatile actress. She is showing the world that Asian-Americans can be just as funny and talented as anyone else, and that they deserve to be treated as such.

The film is a must-see for anyone who wants to see a different side of the Asian-American experience. It's a show that will leave you laughing and thinking, and it's a show that will make you proud to be an Asian-American.
The Doors Takes Viewers On Drug Trip

By MIKE NEWELL

Vienna Center, May 6

Flame, the 1991 film, is very much like the real thing - a trip.

Director Oliver Stone and his movie The Doors, about rock singer Jim Morrison, have already received mixed reviews. Some critics applaud the film's attempt to capture Morrison's spirit, while others question its historical accuracy.

Flame, on the other hand, is a biographical film about the life of Jimi Hendrix. Although Hendrix was less well-known than Morrison during his lifetime, he has since become a cult figure among rock enthusiasts. Flame charts Hendrix's rise to fame, from his early days in London to his legendary performance at Woodstock.

Both films are intended to be visually striking and musically infused. Flame features an array of famous rock songs, including "Purple Haze" and "All Along the Watchtower," while Misery's soundtrack is an accurate representation of Morrison's music.

While Flame has received praise for its realism and authenticity, Misery has been criticized for its portrayal of Morrison's relationships. The film has also been accused of romanticizing the rocker's struggles with drug addiction.

In summary, Flame is a visually stunning film that captures the spirit of Hendrix's music and legacy. Misery, on the other hand, is a more controversial film that has been praised for its honesty but criticized for its inaccuracies. Regardless of their flaws, both films offer a unique glimpse into the lives of two of rock's most influential musicians.
