CU fine arts feature

Lynn MacGregor

The CU Fine Arts Center will celebrate the 20th anniversary of its opening this fall with a variety of events, including a new permanent art collection representing 81 artists, including eight Picassos and Wolverine Fine Arts.

In addition to the permanent collection, the center this fall will display works of contemporary art from the city. In addition, a variety of media, including painting, sculpture, photography, and video will be exhibited.

Several artists of the city's seven cultural communities have been invited to submit works for the 20th anniversary of the opening of the art center. The artists are expected to exhibit two works each from the permanent collection and one work each from the city's seven cultural communities.

Local museums, leaving many companies and Broadway shows, are pleased, though most of the show will be local and regional. On October 14, the old Little Theatre building will become the new Little Theatre. The new Little Theatre will be dedicated to the arts of the city.

Carter foreign policy weak

By Nita

I am surprised at your attacks of high $expectations concerning the current political economy. If anything, it is a threat to our economic stability and it is not a healthy situation. In the context of the situation, we can see that the economy is not doing well, and it is not healthy for our country.

Despite repeatedly opposing principles which characterize the traditional view of foreign policy, President Reagan and his advisors are now advocating the same policies as President Carter. The President Carter and Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev have repeatedly agreed in the past to work towards a peaceful and just solution to the conflict in the Middle East, but the current situation is far from that.

President Carter's foreign policy has been criticized for being too idealistic, while President Reagan's has been criticized for being too pragmatic. Both policies have their merits and flaws, and it is important to consider the context in which they are being implemented.

I would rather see a balanced approach that takes into account the complexities of the situation and the interests of all parties involved. It is important to avoid the trap of simple solutions and to work towards a more nuanced and comprehensive approach.

Law school stiffs thinking

Kurt Clawson

As an undergraduate at Wake, I was fortunate to have my major professor a liberal arts student. He was one of those who considered one could learn anything he wanted. However, I was fortunate to gain a sense of the need to find my own way. This is a sense that I have learned as a law student.

Voter uncertainty exists

The 1980 presidential election involves two and a half candidates. The nominations resulted from greater popular participation in the process than previous presidential elections. Since 1948, 53 million Republicans voted in the Democratic primaries which resulted in the selection of Governor Ronald Reagan by the Republican national convention.

The election is Tuesday, November 4th. You can vote now. After crossing your voting age, American citizens who have been residing in the territory of the United States for at least 10 years will be able to vote in the presidential election. However, there are some conditions regarding voter eligibility.

In this election, the candidates don't even seem to be complaining. We keep hearing about the election, predicted by the organization. The choice which is offered on the ballot involves two parties. The third candidate, the independent ticket, is the only one with a party affiliation. Democrats voted in the primary, and their choices are offered on the ballot. The independent ticket involves two candidates. Approximately thirteen million people voted in the primary.

Two issues will decide winner

Two issues that will decide the election are inflation and unemployment. For example, the economy is in a recession, and unemployment is high. In this case, the candidates will need to address these issues in their campaign platform.

Fond memories of ‘trashing’

Victor Hadley

I can’t help but think that my college days is the most exciting time to be a student. Either pulling diabolical pranks on my suitemates, trashing to a fine art, or just plain having a good time.

But my fondest memories are of the time I spent three-quarters of the way through the Macy’s Thanksgiving Day Parade. I remember thinking that if only we could have made Darryl Stenlock at my suite’s expense, we would have had the perfect revenge.

Unfortunately, as we were leaving the suite, my friend’s brother and I stumbled into the Macy’s Thanksgiving Day Parade. I was wearing a very expensive coat, and my friend was wearing a very expensive tie. We had just bought these things from Macy’s, and we were determined to make sure that they knew it.

We spent the whole parade yelling at everyone we saw, “Look at our new coats and ties!” And we made sure that we were right in front of every single Macy’s store. We thought that our display would make sure that everyone knew how much we had spent.

But we were wrong. By the time we got back to our suite, our coats and ties were already lost. We had even forgotten about them.

In the end, we realized that the best memories of college are the ones that you make with your friends, not the ones that you try to impress the world with.

Violinist’s recital varies

Elmer Oliveira

Of all the recitals of the great violinist Elmer Oliveira’s recital at Chapel Kirk Thursday night, perhaps the most exciting was his version of the Schumann Viola Sonata No. 1.

Dr. Oliveira played the pizzicato passages with such precision that it was impossible to tell whether the notes were being plucked or bowed. His fingers touched the strings so lightly that it seemed as if the whole instrument was one with his body.

The audience was so captivated by his performance that they were able to listen to the music without being distracted by the outside world.
