They also discussed the importance of having a strong political party system and the need for a strong two-party system.
Academic departments to relocate

The department of economics on the first floor, the department of sociology on the second floor, and the departments of psychology and criminal justice on the third floor are expected to be moved. The reductions are expected to save $10 million dollars.

Dr. Carla Cummings
Guilford College

Two buildings on campus will receive new names in line with the renaming of the Russell Specialized Proctorial Center for Law and Management. With the School of Law moving to new facilities, the departments of economics, sociology, speech communication, and history will move into Correll Hall.

The department of mathematics and computer science and the School of Business and Accountancy, which recently occupied Babcock Hall, will occupy the former law library reading rooms in the first floor of Babcock Hall, which will be renamed Babcock Hall.

The International Studies and Asian languages and literature programs will move from Tinkle Hall to Correll Hall. The University Press and the Transpress will also move to Correll Hall.

The moves are part of a comprehensive plan to reallocate space on campus so that no department or program is crowded.

President Bill Clinton, the dean of the college, and Rose Grifith, the assistant vice president for planning, are coordinating the plan, which Griffith and others believe will ensure the continued functioning of Tinkle Hall.

Griffith said another goal of the plan is to ensure that facilities will be used to the fullest. "We have lots of unused space in our buildings," Griffith said. "The department of economics on the first floor, the department of sociology on the second floor, and the departments of psychology and criminal justice on the third floor are expected to be moved. The reductions are expected to save $10 million dollars.

The plan also calls for the consolidation of the School of Business and Accountancy and the Department of Mathematics and Computer Science into a single location, which will be renamed Babcock Hall.

"The idea is to create a more efficient use of space," Griffith said. "The plan is to ensure that no classes will be held in any building that is not being used to its fullest potential."

The board decided against opening the endowed program, since it would "lessen the quality and usefulness, as well as the strength of the university's existing undergraduate and professional programs." According to Provost David Brown, the school would "consider" a divinity school. However, the board set a timetable calling for a decision by the end of 1992; to date only $2.4 million to be raised by the end of 1992; to date only $2.4

Runge called him by a racially derogatory term, but Runge said the assault was unprovoked. Calhoun emphasized that the financial burden to run the school would still be financed, as all Wake Forest professional programs are. Brown expects the shortfall in funds to be made up by other sources of revenue, including the university's endowment.

Why do nice guys always finish last?

The joke in Bill Murray’s latest film, Groundhog Day, is that his character, really smart but hopelessly awkward, could have scored the girl of his dreams if he had just known how women think. Murray’s character, Phil, is a weatherman who is trapped in a time loop and lives the same day over and over again. He becomes obsessed with breaking the cycle and finally makes a move, only to have the woman reject him.

But despite the humor, the joke highlights a real issue: why do nice guys always finish last? According to research, there are several reasons why nice guys may find it difficult to succeed in relationships.

First, nice guys may be prone to讨好 others, which can make them appear weak or submissive. Women may perceive this as a lack of confidence or a lack of assertiveness.

Second, nice guys may be reluctant to assert their needs or boundaries, which can lead to a lack of intimacy and satisfaction in relationships.

Third, nice guys may have difficulty asserting their needs or boundaries, which can lead to a lack of intimacy and satisfaction in relationships.

Lastly, nice guys may find it challenging to be assertive without appearing aggressive or confrontational. This can make it difficult to navigate the complex dynamics of romantic relationships.

In conclusion, while being nice is important, it is also important to be assertive and communicate your needs and boundaries. So, nice guys, remember to be nice, but also remember to be assertive.

Epilogue: A "Nice Guy" Case Study

Meet John, a 27-year-old software engineer who has always been described as a "nice guy." He has never had a long-term relationship and is tired of being the "好人" in every situation.

John meets Sarah at a bar, and they hit it off immediately. Sarah is impressed by John's kindness and willingness to help out. However, when it comes to making a move, John feels awkward and unsure.

So, he asks Sarah for her phone number, but she declines. John decides to send her a message the next day, but she ignores him. John feels crushed and wonders if he is doing something wrong.

Several weeks later, John runs into Sarah at a coffee shop. He approaches her and asks if she wants to get a cup of coffee. Sarah agrees, and they spend the next two hours talking about their interests and hobbies.

John feels comfortable and at ease around Sarah, and she seems interested in getting to know him better. However, John is still unsure about how to take things further.

In conclusion, while John may feel awkward and unsure, he is making progress by initiating contact and engaging in meaningful conversations. With time and practice, he is likely to overcome his hesitations and find success in his relationships.
Public needs to face fact of gays' contribution to military

Eric Williams | Editorial Page

The issue of gays in the military has been a hot topic in recent years, with various groups advocating for and against their presence. One point of contention is the role of gays in the military, especially in light of recent changes in policy.

In the past, the military has been a bastion of heterosexuality, with strict rules against sexual orientation. However, in recent years, these rules have been relaxed, allowing more freedom for gay and lesbian service members.

The argument for allowing gays in the military is that it promotes diversity and equality, allowing for a more inclusive and representative force. On the other hand, opponents argue that it undermines the military's effectiveness and moral compass.

The debate over gays in the military highlights the ongoing struggle for acceptance and equality in society. As we continue to address these issues, it is important to consider the impact of gay and lesbian service members on the military and the country as a whole.

We must firmly face the facts and make our voices heard.

Michael Paul | Opinion

We have become passive spectators of our fate. As a society, we are facing a major crisis, with many people feeling disengaged and disconnected from the political process. It is crucial that we take action and make our voices heard.

One way to do this is to participate in elections and hold our representatives accountable. We can also engage in peaceful protests and speak out against injustices. By taking action, we can help create a better future for ourselves and our communities.

It is important to remember that our voices matter and that we have the power to make a difference. Let us not be passive spectators, but active participants in shaping the world around us.

Freedom is ours to want Rebel flag, wear 'X,' offend others.

Mark Stewart Williams | Editorial Board

When I was 4, I wore my African American flag proudly on my clothes, and people marveled at my courage to show my heritage. As I grew older, I began to realize that not everyone shared my pride in my roots.

In fact, many people have the opposite reaction. They view the flag as a symbol of hate and racism, and they work to ban it from public spaces. This has led to a heated debate about the meaning of the flag and its role in society.

Some people argue that the flag should be banned because it is a symbol of hate and racism. Others argue that it is a symbol of pride and liberation for African Americans.

I believe that the flag should continue to be flown and worn, as it is a powerful symbol of our history and heritage. By flying the flag, we can honor the sacrifices of our ancestors and show pride in our culture.

We must not let the fear of offending others get in the way of celebrating our identity. Freedom is ours to want Rebel flag, wear 'X,' and offend others when we choose.
The rise and rise of tuition

Wake Forest tuition doubles in last seven years to help meet costs of financial plan

By Brian J. Lynam
Associate News Editor

Friday, the board of trustees approved an 8.3 percent increase in the undergraduate tuition for the 1993-94 academic year on a five-year average increase exceeding 10 percent.

Through the percentage increase is 8.3, in terms of the actual amount of money, the increase is only $229 less than last year's 11.1 percent increase, and $1,000 less than the 13.3 percent increase for 1992-93. Thus, as the tuition increases, smaller percentage increases become necessary to achieve an equal or greater monetary increase.

John Anderson, the vice president for finance and administration, said reducing the increase as a percentage means that in the way it has been done before it worked here, but he added that it is to blame others for the percentage and actual revenue increase in the future.

The overall budget for the Reynolds Campus decreased from $54,210,000 to $52,019,000, or 3.8 percent.

Wake Forest family has gone up 77 percent in seven years. This is to say that the composition of the campus is definitely moving in the direction of excluding lower- and middle-class students.

When asked about the increasing difficulty of middle-class students to afford tuition, Holder said:

"This is true to an extent, although we have set some college revenues from the financial aid package to address that. He said the university is attempting something called "loan reductions."""

"Instead of having here, some of the middle-income students will have grants," Holder said. Unlike loans, grants do not accumulate interest and do not have to be paid back.

Information from the Controller's Office also shows financial aid has increased overall 33 percent, from $2,790,000 in 1985-86, to $4,004,000 in 1992-93. In terms of the overall average, financial aid has increased from 25.4 percent to 30.7 divided for the 1992-93 academic year, to 18.6 percent in the 1991-90 period.

A third long-range program that Holder said necessitated the tuition increase is a plan to increase faculty salaries to the top 20 percent in the country.

Proctor 1990-91 to 1991-92, Wake Forest has improved the average faculty salaries for all ranks including full, associate and assistant professors, from $44,400 to $42,400.

However, in rankings compiled by the American Association of University Professors, Wake Forest slipped from fifth to sixth place in the all-ranks category.

Holder said the fourth mean for the large tuition increases is simply inflation. However, Donald Frey, a professor of economics, said, for the white year, December 31 to December 31, inflation was 2.3 percent. "This means that, accounting for inflation, the overall budget of the Reynolds Campus increased 7.9 percent.

The two final causes of the tuition increase trend were increasing the salaries of Facility employees and large group insurance increases.

Holder said, "Physical Plant people were below level market, so we increased their salaries." Holder said "We've been lucky" in regard to insurance.

Wake Forest tuition increases are not only happening at Wake Forest; they are a nation wide trend.

Higher Education Don Blasing of Tulane University, an intra-university co-operative group, compared national university tuition levels by grouping universities that they feel compete against each other for students.

For the 1991-92 year, Wake Forest finished fifth out of 20 competitors, beaten only by Baylor, Stanson and Parrs universities and Trinity College. Holder said the university fell from third place.

Holder said he thinks the results of the tuition increases have been beneficial. "My perception is that Wake Forest right now is it is a much better place than it was in addition in 1982 and in terms of the financial facilities," Holder said.

Anderson said he was not qualified to say if the increases have helped academics or student recruitment. "We can say that in most academic departments because of a multitude of factors, not just tuition," Holder said.

"Most parents looking at Wake Forest and comparing the perception of quality and tuition with other universities that are Wake Forest attractors," Holder said.

Wake Forest must pay because of the need to cover inflation and losses of state monies have been reduced. Wake Forest has put some of its own money into financial aid," Holder said.

When Wake Forest releases figures concerning financial aid, Holder said he is proud of the overall percentage increase in financial aid and does not indicate the actual percentage increase that Wake Forest pays because of the need to cover inflation and losses of government funds.

Holder said the university will be paying 18 percent more for financial aid to cover costs for the coming year, and due to the college has been working on the school for several years.

"Wake Forest is in its infancy by some means," Holder said. "That is because of the planning we did. Before we put in a new program there has to be the greatest funding for it. That makes for sound fiscal policy."

TUITION IS ONE MEANS OF paying for the budget proposed by the financial plan. According to statistics from the Controller's Office, in 1979-80, tuition accounted for $27.2 percent of the total revenue of $15,477,000; or $8,408,382.33. For the 1992-93 budget, 73.4 percent of the $59,638,000 in revenue, or $43,142,292.65, is from tuition.

"We're not currently looking at revenue sources like the endowment to stretch that to the 70th degree," Holder said.

Other forms of revenue include endowments, gifts and grants. One source of such revenue is the Heritage and Promise Campaign, which has raised $118 million to date. According to the campaign office, much of this money is established as an endowment, and often the donations come in the form of long-term investments, of which only the proceeds, such as interest, can be spent.

Holder said many other large universities receive significant funds from the American Association of University Professors, which is organized as an endowment, and often the donations come in the form of long-term investments, of which only the proceeds, such as interest, can be spent.
Copperhead: not ready to quit those day jobs

By Byrne Maurice

As lead singer and guitarist for Copperhead, Andy Shaver (right) was not about to retire from his day job as an accountant to pursue his dream of a music career. But after the first three songs, he says, "With your attention quickly waning, to quit those day jobs doesn't make much sense." Since Shaver's decision in 1976 to form Copperhead, the band has gone through several lineup changes, a stint with RCA Records, and several releases, including "The Scar." Shaver says, "Of course we're not a very large band, but we've been very successful in small ways. We've been able to keep the name out there and continue to play." Copperhead's recent album, "Vanishing," was released in 1989, and the band is now working on new material.

Comical Anarchist opens Friday

Play investigates strange death of police suspect in Milan

By Christopher Lam Rosic

The second half of the University Theatre's season opens tomorrow night with a production of "Accidental Death of an Anarchist," by Italian playwright Dario Fo. Written in 1970 and adapted by Richard Nelson for the American stage, the drama deals with the social problem of death as the focus of an investigation. The play's exploration of the death of a police suspect, portrayed with the death of an anarchist, raises questions about the nature of power and authority.

The play is directed by Donald Wolfs, chairman of the department of drama and director of the University Theatre. He describes the play as a "black comedy." Wolfs said he was inspired to direct the play by a "sense of the absurd" in the plot line.

But do not be fooled by the seemingly dark nature of the title, which refers to a police suspect who is portrayed with the death of an anarchist. "Accidental Death of an Anarchist" is a comedy.

The play, produced by Sligbling Brothers' College of Engineering in Iowa, has a three-year history. The production is based upon Tim Krabbe's novel "Golden Egg," and the cast includes lead singer Nick Carswell's rich voice and producer Tom Dowd's for Dowd, Copperhead. But do not be fooled by these appearances. Thank you, George, for blessing us with yet another of your thrillers."

The Vanishing disappoints with predictable plot that fails to give thrills, chills

A local radio station offered a preview of The Vanishing, a new movie set to open in movie theaters internationally. Originally, I went to see the movie to gain some insight for a psychoanalytical thriller. However, after a month, the movie still hadn't lived up to its expectations.

The movie is about a, "He's not the only one who's disappeared."

The North Carolina band Copperhead just released its self-titled debut LP. The band's first single, "The Scar," has been well-received by critics and fans alike. The album includes a cover of Nick Carvey's "River of Love," and an updated version of Copperhead's signature song, "The Scar." The band is currently touring in support of the album, and will be performing at several festivals in the coming months.
