Trustees approve Graylyn conference center plan

Whitaker to buy land

John Dunn

John C. Whitaker, Jr., president of Intrust Management Inc., signed an agreement in July to buy all of the 96-acre estate from the University of North Carolina System, which owns Graylyn House and the surrounding Graylyn property.

The land, located along Robin Hood Road and Oakleaf Drive, includes the garage's outreach, now used for the French House dormitory. The purchase will help finance the new Graylyn conference center. The Board of Trustees voted in May to sell the entire 96-acre estate to the University, the Graylyn Board, and the Graylyn Advisory Committee (GAC), and other student programs at Graylin.

The Graylyn Board will also approve the conference center's director, who will be responsible for overseeing the operation of the center.

The Graylyn Board will also establish a new conference center, to be named the Graylyn Conference Center.

A Graylyn Board-wide statement was unanimously approved, which will be sent to the Graylyn Advisory Committee (GAC), and other student programs at Graylyn.

Mike Ford

Ford seeks new CU programs

When Michael Ford was first at Wake Forest, he served as College Union major functions committee chairman and brought groups such as Iron Butterfly and the Fifth Dimension to campus. Now, almost two years after his graduation from Wake Forest, he has returned to the organization once again — this time as director of College Union.

Ford's appointment as College Union's student life advisor is an indication of several years' interest and involvement in collegiate campus affairs. After graduating from Wake Forest, where he served as Sigma Chi national vice president, Ford worked as a traveling consultant for Sigma Chi. He visited 40 chapters, spending a few days with each chapter advising them on how to improve their chapters.

Ford said he began to feel he had more significant things to communicate to students than he felt he did not have enough power to influence people's views.

"I'm sure he did as an undergraduate," Ford said. "That year helped him discover that his aptitude for work with student activities, his successful work with college students but also new depths in his Christian faith. He began to feel he had more significant things to communicate to students than he felt he did not have enough power to influence people's views."

Ford currently is an assistant professor in the College of Business Administration at Wake Forest University. He recently completed his dissertation on the impact of student organizations on campus life.

"I'm sure he did as an undergraduate," Ford said. "That year helped him discover that his aptitude for work with student activities, his successful work with college students but also new depths in his Christian faith. He began to feel he had more significant things to communicate to students than he felt he did not have enough power to influence people's views."

Ford believes in the importance of extracurricular activities as a way to help students develop leadership skills.

Money talks ...

Once upon a time in the land of Winston-Salem, something happened that director Glenn Blake of the Student Union Building had not planned. He had never expected that the students would get involved in a problem that would be so costly, so complex, and so difficult to solve. The problem was that the student union was running out of money.

Blake had been trying to solve the problem for months, but he was not having much success. He had tried to get the students to pay more for their meals, but they resented the idea. He had also tried to get the university to provide more funding, but they were not interested. Finally, Blake came up with a plan. He decided to hire a professional fundraiser to help him solve the problem.

The fundraiser was a man named John Smith, who had been successful in raising money for other organizations. He listened to Blake's problem and then suggested that the student union should start a campaign to raise money. He told Blake that the students would be interested in donating money if they knew what the money was going to be used for.

Blake listened to Smith's advice and decided to launch a campaign. He hired a team of volunteers to go door-to-door and ask for donations. He also set up a website where people could make online donations. Within a few weeks, the campaign had raised thousands of dollars.

Blake was thrilled with the results. He had never expected to raise so much money, and he was grateful to the fundraisers for their hard work. He knew that he still had a long way to go, but he was confident that they would be able to solve the problem.

Letters to the editor

Separate but unequal housing freshmen

Dear Editor,

I am writing to express my concern about the separate but unequal housing arrangements for freshmen at Wake Forest. I believe that all students, regardless of gender, should have equal access to housing opportunities.

The current system is discriminatory and unfair. Freshmen are placed in separate dorms based on gender, which is unnecessary and problematic. This separation creates a sense of segregation and inequality that is harmful to the overall community.

I urge the administration to consider making changes to the housing system. This could be done by creating mixed-gender dorms or by allowing students to choose their own roommates regardless of gender.

Thank you for your time and consideration.

Sincerely,

Indian gift

By now, most students are aware that Wake Forest is entering the Indian gaming industry. The Board of Trustees voted in favor of expanding the Indian gaming operations in their meeting last month. The decision was made after a comprehensive study by the university's gaming consulting firm, which found that the potential revenues from Indian gaming could be significant.

The Indian gaming industry is a growing market, and Wake Forest's move into this area is a wise one. The university is well-positioned to capitalize on this opportunity and to provide financial support for the school's programs.

I encourage all Wake Forest students to support the Indian gaming operations and to look forward to the positive impact it will have on the university.

Sincerely,

The National Collegiate Athletic Association convened to vote on the potentially divisive issue of major college athletics.

Highly sediteous, the football program at Wake Forest is firmly pitted in this battle as is the remainder of Wake Forest athletic programs influenced by the results of the controversy.

In an enormous package of their own that included a four-year, $10 million contract with the CFA—NBC deal, the greater the percentage of time Saturday night broadcasts.

The argument has escalated on both sides to the NCAA. Together and negotiate their own television deals. However, this splinter group of colleges. However, this splinter challenge to the NCAA, but around the proposed convention in January.

He stated, "The NCAA's important service performs," Scales said. "It gives us the freedom to put our ball program on television."

"The NCAA's solicitation of college coaches is not being challenged because we recognize our obligations to the institution. Funds fuel survival college athletics."

More in the essential element needed if college athletics are to survive. Scales and Groh both feel cutbacks will continue to rise and to ignore the commercial aspects of college sports, especially football, "is unreasonable and not sustainable the institution realistically."

"The money is without question an important consideration," Scales said. "To deny this reality would endanger the future success of the institution's athletics.""The NCAA's solicitation of college coaches is not being challenged because we recognize our obligations to the institution.

Hooks echoes similar feelings. "The NCAA's solicitation of college coaches is not being challenged because we recognize our obligations to the institution," Hooks said. "If we can't offer a potential recruit the kind of exposure that is accorded to major college football (e.g., all-American) the future development of the program is jeopardized. We feel we can achieve the only by negotiating our own television contracts and exploiting our own football program in the framework of Wake Forest's academic environment.

"We had great success with our basketball program. now we wish to do the same with our football team," Wake Forest, along with the rest of the ACC, negotiates a TV pact for the basketball team with the C.B. Smith network, separate from NCAA superimposed.

Both scales indicated that Wake Forest could benefit quickly from the CFA—NBC deal. Wake Forest is one of the teams who have played in seven major bowl games and games against some of the best teams in the nation. Consequently, the Wake Forest would receive additional exposure.

The controversy represents a major crossroad for college athletics. It also demonstrates the commercial aspects of college sports, especially football, "is unreasonable and not sustainable the institution realistically."

"The money is without question an important consideration," Scales said. "To deny this reality would endanger the future success of the institution's athletics.""The NCAA's solicitation of college coaches is not being challenged because we recognize our obligations to the institution.

"The NCAA's solicitation of college coaches is not being challenged because we recognize our obligations to the institution," Hooks said. "If we can't offer a potential recruit the kind of exposure that is accorded to major college football (e.g., all-American) the future development of the program is jeopardized. We feel we can achieve the only by negotiating our own television contracts and exploiting our own football program in the framework of Wake Forest's academic environment.

"We had great success with our basketball program. now we wish to do the same with our football team," Wake Forest, along with the rest of the ACC, negotiates a TV pact for the basketball team with the C.B. Smith network, separate from NCAA superimposed.

Both scales indicated that Wake Forest could benefit quickly from the CFA—NBC deal. Wake Forest is one of the teams who have played in seven major bowl games and games against some of the best teams in the nation. Consequently, the Wake Forest would receive additional exposure.

The controversy represents a major crossroad for college athletics. It also demonstrates the commercial aspects of college sports, especially football, "is unreasonable and not sustainable the institution realistically."

Schofield impressive; Groh seeks first victory

Jeff Buschman

Despite an opening day loss to the University of South Carolina, Wake Forest football coach Al Groh was pleased with the performance of some key players, especially quarterback Gary Kuhlfeld.

Groh called Kuhlfeld’s first appearance at the professional level “a tremendous debut.”

Kuhlfeld completed his first pass in the second quarter as Wake went on for 25 yards. On the 25-yard play, Wake Forest running back Eddie Johnson scored on a running play.

In the first half, Wake Forest was penalized twice for 15 yards each, and the Deacons were held to three points.

In the second half, Wake Forest took advantage of the occasional mistakes made by the South Carolina defense to score four more points.

In the fourth quarter, Wake Forest scored a touchdown on a two-yard run by running back John T. Johnson.

Groh said he was pleased with the Deacons’ performance in the game, and he believes they will improve as the season progresses.

“Overall, the offense that rushed for 182 yards was impressive,” Groh said. “We need to get more change for change’s sake.”

The Deacons will play their next game against the University of Florida on Friday, September 18, at Memorial Stadium in Tallahassee, Florida.
