Officials clamp down on alcohol

By Lisa Martin

Don’t let over-calling your parents about that alcohol infraction. They know how it’s going. A recent study by the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism found that parents are the first to be called by their children when they’ve had too much to drink.

The study, which surveyed 1,000 parents of college students, found that 70% of parents said they had been contacted by their child about alcohol use at least once in the past year. The most common reason for the call was a binge drinking episode, followed by a night out at a bar or a fraternity party. The study also found that parents were more likely to be contacted if their child was in the hospital or had been arrested for an alcohol-related offense.

The results of the study highlight the importance of communication between parents and children on issues related to alcohol use. It’s important for parents to be aware of what their children are doing and to have open and honest conversations about alcohol use.

The study also emphasizes the need for continued education and support for parents. Many parents feel unprepared to address issues related to alcohol use with their children, and may benefit from resources and support to help them navigate these conversations.

In addition to communicating with their children, parents can also work to create a safe and supportive environment at home. This includes setting clear boundaries around alcohol use, being a good role model, and providing resources and support for their children as they navigate the challenges of college life.

In addition to the construction and renovation projects, the facilities management staff also looked into the causes of an underground explosion that occurred last year outside of Davis House, dumping power to the residence hall and surrounding buildings for several hours.

Groner also said engineers were consulted about the causes of the explosion, but they did not have the time to fully investigate the possibility of any such explosions, but there was no way to examine any existing cable. Travies and Davis House and Elder Residence Hall underwent the most costly and complete of the renovations. As a cost of $4 million, the buildings received data wiring, access systems, new air conditioning, improved ventilation systems and lighting systems in hallways, and new coat of paint.

The renovation of the Athletic Center was the second most expensive construction project, with a price of $3.5 million. Indoor tennis courts were added to the second floor to the Athletic Center building that will be used for office space for coaches. The project was four months completed and the air conditioning and fire systems were improved.

Renovations and slight improvements were made to Davis Dormitory in Trible. The dormitory and the large classrooms in the Z. Smith Reynolds Library for the addition of data wiring.

The renovation of Grenier Stadium was completed over the summer. Seats were removed and new lighting and roof was installed. Additional seats and press boxes are planned for the next five months. In September, initial forms were placed on the concrete. The steel will be ready for the first five months. During the Christmas holidays, the press boxes and seating areas will be upgraded. The concrete tiers that will be built will be changed next spring. More computer wiring will be installed at various times around the campus over the next few years.

Trible, Kitchens House, Johnson and Hawthorn residence halls will undergo renovations during the summer of 1996.

The Core Drug and Alcohol Survey

From students indulge in binge drinking—ancient problem, but the problem of Wake Forest students are planning to get to the bottom of last semester found that 44 percent of students who drink reported binge drinking. Although suspension and expulsion are sometimes used to address this behavior, students are calling for a more comprehensive approach.

Although some might argue that binge drinking is simply a part of college life, it is important to recognize the consequences of this behavior. Binge drinking can lead to academic difficulties, health problems, and even legal consequences. It is important that students take responsibility for their actions and seek support when needed.

We believe that repeated offenses involving alcohol abuse indicate the need for direct and immediate intervention.

Ken Zick

An article in the Student Life newspaper emphasizes the need for a stronger approach to addressing the issue of binge drinking on campus. The editorial argues that while some students may view binge drinking as a rite of passage, it is important to recognize the negative consequences of this behavior.

The editorial states, "We believe that repeated offenses involving alcohol abuse indicate the need for direct and immediate intervention." This is a call to action for the university administration and community members to take a more proactive approach to addressing the issue.

As a part of campus-wide renovations, the Benson University Center underwent numerous changes this summer. The new center is intended to close loopholes that existed in the past and provide a more comprehensive approach to addressing alcohol abuse on campus.

The new center includes a fitness consultant, a expanded community service hours, and a more transparent pass system.

The Passing of Legends

As an older generation of professors passes on, others are left to reflect upon what the university means to them personally. One of the differences between the generations is the desire today's teachers have to publish, in addition to teaching full time.

"Wake Forest is a place where you don't just teach knowledge, but create knowledge."

- Neil Weslager

In today's university, teaching and research are more often connected in terms of large opportunities. But, when Wake Forest was founded, its faculty were called upon to stay at the school and eventually become part of the faculty. The first three faculty members were president E. Pendleton Banks, who had been part of the school for most of his life, and others who taught to their lives, recently passed away. Hadley, a professor of history, who taught at the university for a long time and was a Wake Forest alumnus, said.

"They are the people what has happened to the university is the equivalent of that here. I think we still have some of that."

Hadley was a Wake Forest alumnus and taught at the university for many years before retiring last year. He was also a member of the history department's honors program for outstanding students.

"The faculty does enhance student's learning experience. They care about you. They don't just show they love you."

According to faculty members, the university is a place where faculty members can get to know their students better. They care about their students. They are involved in the center of the university's honors program for outstanding students.

"It's a place that is friendly and there is a sense of camaraderie. The faculty comes from across the country and everywhere, they have a sense of community."

Though the faculty comes from a far wide range of backgrounds, students come from across the country and everywhere, they have a sense of community. They are the people who you can talk to, and that's a small group that they care about.

"There is an adversarial climate in which they teach hard and are involved."

As parents who are paying a great deal of money for their child's education, they want the best for their child.

"The faculty and the students are still involved in lots of different cultural and educational programs."

Even though the faculty comes from a wide range of backgrounds, they are involved in the university's honors program for outstanding students.

"But there is a question whether since the university has increased, the university has a greater sense of identity.

"Some questions whether some things are changing at the university, whether there is a negative impression that this might have right now. But I think that we have an identity crisis right now."

The faculty and the students are still involved in lots of different cultural and educational programs. The university is a place where faculty members and students can get to know their students better. They care about their students. They are involved in the center of the university's honors program for outstanding students.

"When I think about it, I think we are paying too much for the education we are getting."

Alcohol policy: Crying to mom

You may have noticed that the student and alumni newspapers have been throwing a lot of ink on the topic of alcohol. It seems like every other week, we hear about another student caught drinking. More and more, the administration is detailing the consequences.

Once again, the university is concerned about what it sees as a growing problem and is attempting to parents in a constructive way. They are sending letters home both raising the awareness of the issue and attempting to parent its students. The university is trying to make parents aware of the trend and to have the ability to deal with it.

But will writing to parents really expedite these trends? It seems like the reality this is less and less the case. The university instituted a new alcohol policy which details the consequences of drinking. These letters home both raises the awareness of the issue and attempting to parent its students. The university is trying to make parents aware of the trend and to have the ability to deal with it.

The Student Newpaper

Student trustee, not SLC trustee

Speaking of taking away student privilege, the new position of student trustee is beginning to be realized. Students voted for trustee candidates in the Student Life Committee and the new trustee, Shannon Faulkner, has been chosen. The question then arises, is this a good thing for the student body?

The student trustee position is supposed to be a voice for the student body. However, the student trustee is not supposed to interfere with the university administration. This position supposedly exists to be a liaison between the administration and the student body. This position has not been as effective as it should be. Offensive ad

The insert (the final issue of the Old Gold and Black) is over. "She's a Child. She's a Child, she's a Child," was the only ad I felt that was somewhat offensive. The insert was not a product of the university, and that it was a preocious publication of an organization which annoyed me a great deal to the point where I believe that this student edition enough of what students financially are preventing any alcohol from being advertised.

However, this insert did nothing but instigate stronger emotions that were not centered around constructive, social or political controversy. Instead, this insert just seemed to provide insight into a certain setting. Another issue that exists is that the issue about social and political controversy. Odds are, college will change you

W e now breathe the air of the 90s, which means that school curriculums have to be revised to keep up with all the new technology that is in the market. Therefore, the school systems and school boards have to adapt to this new technology.

Statistics tell us that approximately 1 million people are high school graduates, and say that they do not plan to return to school. And while that number may be small, it will probably be in your hometown.

Percentages show that about 50% of high school graduates do not plan to return to school. This is one of the reasons why teachers and administrators have to keep up with current technology.

Ask around — especially to religious majors — to find out what courses might be the most valuable to you. Attend several of the religious group activities and meetings on campus. It’s a great way to meet new people, learn new things, and get free food.

Odds are, college will change you.

enjoyable, nice.

One thing I like about it is that it’s free. But then again, it’s not like a lot of the other things.

Despite loss of Neill, women's golf team aims high once again

By Brian Stays

CAC coach Danie Despoisey expects a "very strong" effort by the Demon Deacons this fall, but expects the loss of senior遏sor Caitlin Neill to be the key challenge this season.

"We only have four seniors and she's one of them," Despoisey said. "She was our second-best player, and I think this season will depend on how well we replace her."

Neill, who had been a key member of the Demon Deacons for four years, will be replaced by junior Kayla Walker and sophomore Jen Paulson.

"We're excited about our team," Despoisey said. "We have a lot of young talent and we're looking to improve this year."

The Demon Deacons finished 34th at the NCAA Championships last season, and Despoisey is hoping for a stronger showing this year.

"We want to improve on our NCAA finish, and we're working hard to make that happen," she said.

Despoisey said that the team will be led by Walker, who finished third at the ACC Championships last season.

"She's our key player," Despoisey said. "We expect her to lead the way for us this season."
Men’s golf looks to recapture form

By Bobby Carlock

Ansonia and Branford

The Denison Deacons men’s golf team is looking to regroup after a disappointing finish to the fall season, which begins Wednesday, Oct. 10. After dropping to fourteenth ranked last year, Head Coach Jack Lewis is hoping that the returning seniors will lead the team back to high rankings in the ACC Tournament.

"I think last year was a little bit of a wake-up call for us," Lewis said. "We’re looking for wooden to be a little bit better. We have three freshmen, but for Wake Forest and Duke, our conference opponents." According to Lewis, the team’s main concern is depth. "I think with the three newcomers we are going to have a lot of early season pressure, so we need to be ready," Lewis said.

Three seniors, Will Smith, Matt Aubin, and Ben Evans, are expected to be key players for the Deacons. Smith has led the team in scoring with an average of 74.9 for the last two years. Aubin, a junior transfer from Florida State, is expected to contribute to the team’s success. Evans played every contest for the Deacons last year and was one of the team’s top two scorers.

The Deacons are treading on the tightrope of success this season. Team leadership and chemistry will help the team improve. "I think we have a lot of returning experience," Lewis said. "We have a lot of returning players for the team to look to." The team is looking to build on its success from last year and will not be ready to play without the senior leadership. According to Lewis, the senior class will be key to the team’s success. "I think they will be able to help right away," Lewis said of his seniors. "This is the team’s year." The team is looking to recapture its form from last season and will be ready for the ACC and national tournaments.

Women’s tennis tunes up for fall schedule

By Mauricie Kinayman

Ansonia and Branford

For college tennis teams lucky enough to avoid injuries, fall can be an opportune time. Coaches’ greatest concerns before the competitive season begin often center around breaking their teams’ most experienced players into new physical and mental states for personal improvement.

For the second consecutive year, the Denison Demon women’s tennis team hopes that earlier than usual spring semester is in mind of comparatively little change being made in a situation that is relatively fresh. Head Coach Jeninle Mumford’s goal is defining how best to improve the team’s output with a younger lineup.

The improvements of the group are somewhat appreciated, however, by the natural tenauer of Dennison’s spring semester. The schedule brings the first round of school history to the team, and it should be an excellent opportunity for Mumford’s team to establish their team status.

The team finally finished their season ranked in the top 10 in the country. Almost equally important, last spring was defined by a remarkable balance between the Deacons and the go-to team in Duke. It was an experience that many Deacons look back on fondly.

Sophomore Sanetra Van Zwaal followed through on a two-handed backhand in a match last season. Her improvement in the fall season will be key to the team’s success. Van Zwaal, along with seniors Jamie Godfrey and Logan Murren, are expected to be key players for the Deacons.

"We’re really excited to have them back," Lewis said. "They bring a lot of experience to our team. The pressure will be on them to perform well, but they should be able to handle it." The Deacons will see their first autumn warm-up action of the year in three weeks, when they head to the Wolfsburg Classic in Durham. "They don’t really need a lot of doubles and tackles," Lewis said. "I think they will be able to handle it." Experience men's tennis team looks toward future

By Scott Plante

With only one senior on their roster last year, the Demon Deacons men's soccer team was virtually guaranteed to be younger and feel inexperienced as the season progressed. Again this year, the lack of experience played the team by contributing to close losses and mental mistakes.

Because of last year's youth movement, one can expect many of the key references to have second-guess themselves and question their abilities. Expect to see a lot of experiments, a lot of philosophy, and we're not sure what to expect. Expect to see a lot of improvements, a lot of questions, and we're not sure what to expect. Expect to see a lot of growth, a lot of development, and we're not sure what to expect. Expect to see a lot of progress, a lot of learning, and we're not sure what to expect.

Thus far, the Demon Deacons are 1-1-1 in ACC play and 6-3-2 overall.
