Trusted Reject Faculty Proposal For 5-Day Week

By LINDA CARTER
MANAGING EDITOR
Wake Forest University, Winston-Salem, notes that the trustees have rejected a proposal for a five-day week for students. The trustees met on March 15, 1961, and voted to reject the proposal. The proposal was made by a group of students who wanted a shorter academic year.

The trustees had been impressed with the benefits of a shorter academic year, such as increased student participation in extracurricular activities and a more relaxed atmosphere. However, they also realized the potential drawbacks of a shorter academic year, such as increased costs and decreased academic standards.

The trustees expressed their appreciation for the students' efforts to create a more efficient academic year, but ultimately decided that the benefits of a shorter academic year were not sufficient to justify the potential drawbacks. They stated that they would continue to consider the issue in the future.

Pass-Fail Grading System Has Limited Beginning

By LINDA LEVY

A major change in the grading system at Wake Forest has been introduced this semester. The new grading system, called “Pass-Fail,” is designed to provide students with more flexibility and opportunities.

The Pass-Fail system is comprised of five different levels: A, B, C, D, and F. Students can choose any one of these levels as the basis of their grade. The level chosen will be placed on the student’s transcript.

The new grading system is expected to provide students with more opportunities to participate in extracurricular activities and to pursue their academic interests. It is hoped that the new system will also encourage students to work more independently and to take greater responsibility for their own education.

President Assumes 26 New Faculty Appointees

Junior Advisors Assume Positions

By LINDA LEVIN

Tuesday morning, the first group of junior advisors met with Miss Mary Alice Leake, Dean of Student Life, to begin their orientation program and the role they would play in the college of women's office. The junior advisors were selected for their ability to encourage freshmen girls to continue their studies and to develop into self-sufficient women. They would be responsible for guiding and supporting the freshmen as they transition from high school to college.

The junior advisors were trained in areas such as communication, leadership, and group dynamics, with the goal of helping the freshmen adjust to college life. They were expected to be role models for the freshmen and to provide guidance and support as needed.

The junior advisors were encouraged to be proactive in their role, to be approachable, and to listen to the freshmen's needs. They were also expected to be knowledgeable about the resources available on campus and to be able to direct freshmen to the appropriate office or resource.

The junior advisors were also responsible for organizing and leading activities for the freshmen, such as orientation programs, social events, and study groups. These activities were designed to help the freshmen feel welcome and to foster a sense of community among the freshmen.

The junior advisors were expected to be enthusiastic and committed to their role. They were encouraged to think of themselves as members of the college community, and to be invested in the success of the freshmen they were mentoring.

The junior advisors were supported by the Dean of Student Life and the office of women's programs, with the goal of providing the freshmen with the support they needed to succeed in college.

They Come Seeking Something Better

News-Record Oct. 22, 1967

While some parents of freshmen already have arrived, many are still en route. With the more than 1,000 new students to be collected into the senior community, many will be at Wake Forest for the first time.

John Cherry, who is the associate director of admissions, said, "I think it's going to be a good year. We've got a lot of interest." His office has been open since Aug. 20, and he has had a steady stream of visitors.

During the past week, he said, they have been primarily parents of potential freshmen. "They're interested, but they haven't made up their minds," he said.

What parents want to see is a college that will be a good fit for their child. "We want to make sure that the college is the right one for the student," Cherry said.

One of the main points of interest for parents is the academic program. "We want to make sure that the student is going to get a good education," Cherry said.

The cost of tuition for a year at Wake Forest is approximately $9,000. "Parents want to know if the college is going to provide a good return on their investment," Cherry said.

Another concern is the size of the college. "Parents want to know if the student is going to feel comfortable," Cherry said.

The college has a diverse population, with students from all over the United States and from many different backgrounds. "We want to make sure that the student is going to feel comfortable," Cherry said.

The college has a strong emphasis on athletics, and parents want to know if the student is going to have the opportunity to participate in sports. "We want to make sure that the student is going to be able to participate," Cherry said.

Parents also want to know if the college is going to provide a good environment for the student. "We want to make sure that the student is going to feel safe and secure," Cherry said.

The college has a strong emphasis on service learning, and parents want to know if the student is going to have the opportunity to participate in community service. "We want to make sure that the student is going to feel involved," Cherry said.

Blue Devils Control Ball As Deac Offense Sputters

Quickness, Speed, Depth Fuel Tate's Best Wake Forest Team

BY BOB ROBERTS

Duke was in control from start to finish as it defeated Wake Forest, 31-13, in an ACC football game on Saturday afternoon. The Blue Devils led 14-0 at halftime and scored the first 17 points of the second half to put the game out of reach.

State, on the other hand, had to work harder to come away with a 13-7 victory over the Demon Deacons. The game was scoreless at halftime, but State scored the first six points of the second half to take the lead for good.

The Blue Devils' offense scored on its first two possessions of the game, setting the tone for the rest of the afternoon. Duke quarterback Ben Coates completed 18 of 23 passes for 213 yards and three touchdowns. Running back Artis Ball carried 15 times for 120 yards and two scores.

State's defense held Wake Forest to just 13 points, allowing the Blue Devils to maintain their lead throughout the game.

Tate's Best Wake Forest Team

Coach Bill Tate said this year's team is the best he's had at Wake Forest. "These guys have worked hard and are very disciplined," Tate said.

Defensive coordinator Jim Schmetzer said the defense is playing well in the season's early stages. "We're making some big plays and the unit is playing well together," Schmetzer said.

The Blue Devils next host Virginia Tech on Oct. 13.

Psychotherapy and existentialism

By Richard Sink

Psychotherapy and existentialism are two sides of the same coin. Psychotherapy is the practice of helping people resolve their problems, while existentialism is the study of the human condition.

Psychotherapy is a process of helping people understand their thoughts, feelings, and behaviors, and to find ways to change them. It is often used to treat mental health problems, such as depression, anxiety, and addiction.

Existentialism is the study of the human condition, and how we are defined by our experiences. It is often used to explore the meaning of life, and to understand the nature of reality.

The two sides of the coin are connected, as psychotherapy can be used to help people find meaning in their lives. By helping people understand their experiences, psychotherapy can help them to find a sense of purpose and meaning.
