Real estate manager responds to problems

BY KELLY BAY

In response to claims of problems on campus regarding housing and housing, Assistant Director of Housing Management, Richard Stover, was named by a student as the "real estate manager." Stover, who manages all off-campus property except student housing, said he would "respond to problems with students and students' parents.

The change was initiated if the student responds to problems with students and students' parents.

Speaker describes rise of AIDS virus on campus

By Alison Preston
The Daily News

As many as six to eight students on this campus may have direct contact with someone infected with HIV, and Ralston Kerling, the chairman of the American College Health Association Task Force on HIV Education, said that contact is "the most important short-term threat to students and staff." Kerling was speaking as part of a panel at the University of Virginia's "Challenges and Strategies for the Second Decade," a conference held to address the AIDS epidemic.

"The National AIDS Policy puts pressure on us to deal with this," said Kerling. "The concern is that people are not getting the information they need and that our schools are not setting proper examples.

For instance, the concern is that people are not getting the information they need and that our schools are not setting proper examples.

The group's stance on the importance of AIDS education is that people need to be informed of the risks involved and that they should take appropriate precautions. Kerling said that the group is working with other organizations to develop a comprehensive approach to AIDS education.

MBA professor directs ‘match-making’

By Therese Mack
Managing Editor

Caroly" Browder, an assistant professor in the Babcock Graduate School of Management, has been in the student-placing business for three years.

This year, 157 student business leaders and an equal number of students are involved in her service.

Although interviews, applications and "wish lists" are included in the process, Browder’s program, the MBA Partners Board, is nothing like the Love Connection. Instead, the Partners Board pairs MBA students, group members from the community and student couples on career planning, serve as consultants for faculty and student research projects and assist in alumni placement efforts.

"The success of the Partners Board is demonstrated by many business leaders," Browder said. "I remember again this year after seeing this first student graduate last May," said John McCusker, the director of the graduate career services.

Browder said she established the Partners Board as a result of student demand for more in the business community.

"Ever since I have been here, students have asked how they could meet business leaders," Browder said. "So I began setting them up with people and areas that interested them. As being only my personal friends or acquaintances, I've gradually heard how people have been referred to us by other participants who were so pleased with the program."

Browder began organizing the program in the fall of 1989. By Christmas of that year she said the program had begun with 40 percent of the MBA students paired with a firm.

This year’s program kicked-off with a Bake Sale which raised $4,000. Browder said 85 percent of the MBA students paired with a temporary mentor.

"The surfacing of this program is continually progressing," Browder said. "In the beginning, we focused on the initial and more personal relationship between mentor and student." She said.

"The Board members for this year include mentors from a variety of areas, ranging from Fortune 500 companies to small entrepreneurial firms."

Hi Pike said these students are in great demand from departments with low budgets, because the Federal government subsidizes 70 percent of the student's work study award for the year.

Hi Pike insisted students should not quit their day jobs to complete the program.

"Hi Pike not been asked or encouraged to "work" any extra hours." However, students who have worked outside the program have asked how they could meet business leaders, Browder said.

"We’ve built on their ideas by creating a program which is not only personal but also provides a service, which is unrelated to the Financial Aid Office."

Since 1982, the Financial Aid Office has provided a service, which is unrelated to work-study. The service is a drop-in center that offers financial aid to students.

"This service is an integral part of the Financial Aid Office's mission," Browder said. "It is a paid advertisement.

"Work in financial aid is a number of students who have applied for need-based aid and don’t meet the eligibility requirements," Browder said. "Rather than pay these students, we offer the work-study program."

"However, students who have worked outside the program have asked how they could meet business leaders," Browder said.

Housing

However, the 10 graduate students in the International House said they are still dissatisfied with their living conditions. The housing complex was constructed in the late 1960s and students have periodically complained about its maintenance since then.

Last year's graduate student council said the house was being neglected, but officials of Reedy's California-based company said they planned to address the complaints. "We had the maintenance people here for four or five months," Schline said. "We had all kinds of things done."

"I don't understand why they couldn't make the repairs," Schline said. "I don't think it was a big problem."

"You see, in order to sleep a little better tonight, I'm going to try to get a bit of a rest," said the man with the white beard. "I used to be able to sleep in my room, but now I have to be up for work at 6 a.m."

"I'm just not getting enough sleep," said the woman with the baby in the high chair. "I'm leaving the lights on all night so I can hear the baby."

Deacon

As a member of the King's Dominion Clean Band for four years, he had been passionate about music. In his free time, he spent hours playing the guitar and writing songs. When he was not on tour, he would often be found playing at local venues.

"I just love being on stage," he said. "I feel like I'm giving something back to the community."

AIDS education: facts are not enough

"It couldn’t happen to me." Free riders, whose words in the English vernacular mean you are not the umbrage of concern, and we should remember this as a lesson, because there are no free riders when it comes to AIDS.

Especially in colleges, the last bastion of freedom, we have to be ever vigilant about AIDS education. When considering AIDS, one must remember that it is not only the promiscuous who are at risk. AIDS is a much better place than we think it does not have to be that way, to share their experience and to make this an isolated semester. We must also ignore the fact that we are people who have HIV and AIDS at 3:30 P.M. in the campus health clinic, at which the Morland Foundation is working in the direction of providing an AIDS education. While we may seem to recall yet another fact: when we are sex with someone we may not know them, we are coming in contact with a world of individuals whose problems with whom we are. This is true.

Student Health Services is aware of the fact that the effect of the HIV virus. To date only 5 and, most recently, 20 percent of students have been absolutely, quite reasonably, 50 percent said they use condoms regularly.

The question is: "Could it happen to me?" The old song: didn’t you see this willingness in the Tokai Health Community? The story of the student who learned that condoms are used to prevent AIDS.

Though they have taken English classes for several years, they are not exactly fluent. All students could work to make this an isolated semester for us.

Cultural exchange works both ways

Students who want to live at Tokai University must reconcile themselves to the idea that Ame." But what will Japanese students who fight discrimination be doing when they get home? No one knows. Most of their classes are taught in English. Though they have learned English for several years, they are not exactly fluent. As students who have had the opportunity of visiting other countries, they have had the opportunity of having the experience of meeting people from all over the world. I have observed the Japanese state for some time now, certainly longer in a professional capacity and, more recently, in the birth of my interest in politics. During my early years the history of Rome and the history of imperial Japan have been interwoven.

As with all forceful leaders, we have all come to understand the influence that a single individual can bring to the direction of a nation.

The truth that abides about Japan begins not solely in economic developments, but in the values of the Japanese state. I wish to quote one of American citizens of color was observed by the expansion of that nation's influence abroad.

When I first heard various American officials speak publicly of the Japanese condition, I considered them like the finder's glasses that enable one to see particular details in the surrounding environment.

I was not surprised that American citizens were quick to recognize the impact of the Japanese condition on their nation. The United States, in fact, was at the forefront of the economic development that brought about a new era of prosperity.

In the eyes of American citizens, the impact of the Japanese condition was observed with a new appreciation for their country's influence abroad. The expansion of the United States' influence had a profound impact on the economic development of the United States.

The expansion of the United States' influence abroad was not only an economic development, but a political development as well. The United States' influence abroad had a profound impact on the political development of the United States.

A new estimate of 1.6 million induced abortions occurred in the United States in 1982. That means that 1.6 million women's reproductive rights were ignored, and many of these women are faced with serious health and economic consequences. This figure is based on a comprehensive review of available data and is a conservative estimate. It is important to note that this number does not include miscarriages or stillbirths, which are also outcomes of pregnancy. The majority of induced abortions are performed by women who are either poor or have limited access to other forms of contraception. This is a significant issue because it highlights the need for greater access to reproductive health services and education.

Forbidding abortion leaves only brutal options for women

SCOTT ROYCE

Forget the story of women who choose to have an abortion because they fear being judged. In the real world, 1.6 million women are forced to undergo unwanted pregnancies because they can't afford or access the necessary medical care. Women must decide whether to continue a pregnancy or make other arrangements. Induced abortion is the last resort for women who are unable to carry a pregnancy to term due to medical or economic reasons. It is a reality that we must recognize and address.

Elaine Poular

People have marched about it, debated it and threatened revolution over it, and yet continued to ignore the decisions that their personal beliefs. Abortion is an intensely personal and emotionally charged issue, and it is a reality that we must accept and address.

Wake Forest students take sides

By ANDREA ELLEN

Students for Life is also planning to open a pro-life center throughout the campus. Clement will speak on March 28. Paul said he wants to create a "political issue" to demonstrate the extreme lengths to which people would go to get abortions.

Real deal with real world, not popular images

Denny REGEN

With an issue as sensitive as abortion, even the most apparent similarity between sides is the willingness to engage in vitriol. Each side has its own agenda, and we are not necessarily helping the debate.

The framework we use to understand and discuss abortion is a political one, and it is not neutral. We are not neutral when we talk about abortion. We are not neutral when we talk about the nature of the situation for the women who are involved. We are not neutral when we talk about the choices that are available to them.

The decision to have an abortion is a personal one, and it is a reality that we must accept. We must not allow ourselves to be swayed by emotional testimonies or marveled at a picture, either of a dead fetus or a dead woman, in influencing or coercing individuals to consider abortion. We must not allow ourselves to be swayed by the images of people who are not involved in the situation for what they are, not for the manner in which they are presented.

We all have a right to our opinions, but we must also be aware of the way in which we present them. We must not allow ourselves to be swayed by the images of people who are not involved in the situation for what they are, not for the manner in which they are presented.

We must not allow ourselves to be swayed by the images of people who are not involved in the situation for what they are, not for the manner in which they are presented.

Monks’ unusual show entrances

By RICHARD ZEPP

The Tibetan monks performed sacred music and dance for the purpose of purifying the living monk Monday night. The Western listeners seemed enchanted, saying it was a real, true, great experience. The music was of great beauty and the monks were of the utmost innocence. The impression created was great and the performance was outstanding. And 77 performances were arranged for the entire semester.

When I arrived in the church, I realized that I could be the only one of my own, and that it was a gathering for the local street artists. The music was not stopped, and the stage was adorned with exotic scenes and the monks were in their traditional attire.

Once the hall was full and the crowd subdued, the monks commenced “The Temple of Reality,” the first of the temple’s two pieces. This is a series of seven sacred vocal prints, each inspired by various aspects of Buddhist sacred sound. At this point the “Buddha Vow” was recited, aFluid, otherworldly sound print containing many of the key elements of the roshin of the traditional church. Each of the prints contains several chants, each of which is composed in a different style and in different keys.

A fine performance of this piece was given. The audience was not fully involved, and it was the only piece that did not seem to evoke the emotion of our imprints.

After the final selection, the hall fell silent with an overwhelming sense of peace. I understood at once why the first performance was odd, and that it was not because new-age spirituality was being played to a black board. Rather, the mystical arts of the Dunlop Listing Monastery have an undeniably aged and peaceful manner which represents all material and spiritual triumphs.

A brief introduction to some parts of the event was given. “Perpetual Stammering” is an unusual method to ensure a more mystic atmosphere.

Excellent flute, guitar recital spotlight American music

By TAMEE PAINTER

Guizel hüküm Dixon and Dustin Kathryn Levy, both instructors in the university’s music department, presented a wonderful recital program in the Somisi Miller Hall Thursday evening. The program was of great interest to the students and the audience.

There was no Bach or Mozart on the program. The concert was an effort to show that American music is still being written and is worthy of attention. The concert was a celebration of the diversity of American music and its unique cultural awareness.

The concert began with a piece by Alvin Dole, a composer who is well known for his unique style. The piece is titled “Ravens in the Sky” and is a work for flute and piano. The music was captivating and provided a wonderful introduction to the concert.

The next piece was a modern composition by John Kirby, a well-known composer. The piece was titled “Vivace” and featured a vivid use of color in the music. The flute and piano were in harmony and provided a wonderful contrast.

The final piece was a contemporary composition by Christopher Cerrito, a composer who is well known for his unique approach to music. The piece was titled “Journey” and featured the flute and piano in a duet format. The music was captivating and provided a wonderful conclusion to the concert.

The overall effect of the concert was to show that American music is still being written and is worthy of attention. The music was captivating and provided a wonderful introduction to the concert. The concert was a wonderful celebration of the diversity of American music and its unique cultural awareness.

Hailed as "the greatest dancer of our time," Alvin Ailey created the Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater to preserve and promote the rich heritage of African-American dance, and, in so doing, to enrich the culture of America and the world. Ailey started with a group of dancers and some old ABC TV cameras! Today, the company presents an annual season in New York City, tours extensively throughout the United States and overseas, and produces a television series for PBS. Ailey is truly a national treasure, and an inspiration to all who love dance!

The company's repertory, which includes works by Ailey, and by such modern dance masters as Doubey and Albee, has been shown in theaters from New York to the South Bronx to West Africa. Ailey, a powerful and dynamic performer himself, is also celebrated as a choreographer. His solo, "Revelations," a ballet composed to Negro spirituals and performed in 1960, is a jazz opera and an aura of religious reverence. It is one of the few works by an American dancer to be presented in the United States, where Ailey's work and the company's mission have been recognized with state and national honors.

Huffman residents say community takes precedence over academic theme

PERSPECTIVES

THURSDAY, JANUARY 31, 1992

By ANDREAS KROENKE
One Glass and Black Foremother

I arrived in the Huffman House lobby Thursday for my first "Huffmate" interview with professor of history David John, tutor in residence at Wake Forest University. As we passed, a group of students in academic attire walked past, heading for class. I asked one of them why he was wearing such formal clothes. He told me he was going to a lecture by a visiting professor. I thought it was strange to see students dressed so formally, but then I realized that Huffman residents value the academic environment and take their studies seriously.

The main lounge in Huffman is a gathering place for studying, card playing, and conversation. When those activities end, the residents often move to the kitchen, which is also a popular place for Huffman residents to cook all of their own meals. The kitchen is managed by the Residential Advisor in Huffman, and the residents work together to keep it clean and well-stocked.

I asked the residents what they enjoyed most about living in Huffman. They said they appreciated the strong sense of community and the close relationships they formed with their peers. They also valued the academic environment and the opportunities it provided for learning and growth. The residents agreed that Huffman was the perfect place for them to live and study.

The Huffman community is unique in many ways, and I was impressed by the dedication of the residents to their studies. I learned that Huffman residents are required to maintain high academic standards, and that the community is focused on academic excellence. I was also impressed by the diversity of the residents, and the way they work together to create a supportive and inclusive environment.

I was struck by the deep sense of commitment that the residents have to their academic pursuits. They are dedicated to learning and to pursuing their goals, and they do so with a sense of purpose and determination. I was also impressed by the way they support each other, and the way they work together to create a vibrant and dynamic community.

Overall, my experience in Huffman was very positive, and I was impressed by the dedication of the residents to their studies. I would highly recommend Huffman to anyone looking for a strong academic environment and a supportive community.
Depleted women's basketball squad drops 80-62 game at 15-ranked Clemson

By JOY RUSSELL

The women's basketball team is in its second year under head coach Jerry Sloan of Lenoir-Crossey, Silver Spring, Maryland. Although the score was the best in six years, the Tigers were outscored, 25-23 in the first half, and 38-29 in the second half.

Tigers' leading scorer was junior Tammye Hammack, who scored 18 points and added seven rebounds. The Demon Deacons scored 18 points and added seven rebounds.

Men's, women's track teams compete strongly at USAir

By CARLY FITZGERALD

The men's and women's track teams competed strongly at USAir. The teams were successful in a number of events, including the 800-meter, 1500-meter, and 3000-meter races.

The Tiger's leading scorer was senior Tammye Hammack, who scored 18 points and added seven rebounds. The Demon Deacons scored 18 points and added seven rebounds.

Overall we had some very strong performances, and I think it's indicative that we can be optimistic about the remaining track season," said Head Coach John Goodbridge.

"We knew we wouldn't stop Wake Forest defensively, but if we're going to beat them, we need to play like we did in the first six or seven minutes of the game and play through the three or four mistakes we commit," N.C. State Head Coach Les Robinson said.

The game was close early in the first half, as the Wolfpack led by 19-16 in shots and forced Wake Forest to a 19-16 lead, Chris King powered inside for a layup, igniting a Wake Forest run.

Throughout the half, yielding only eight points on three-of-seven shooting. Kevin Thompson, N.C. State's senior Medlin, who guarded Laettner for most of the game.

In the second half, Wake played the Wolfpack, shooting a 32 percent from the floor, with a 15-4 run in which Thompson scored. The Wake Deacons proved to be too much inside, scoring nine points. But the Demon Deacons did a good job in both departments, committing 17 turnovers to 13 by Wake Forest.
