Planning committee unhappy with decision

Scott Fitzgerald

Construction of dorms begins in two weeks, but work on a $1.5 million project which was approved last week by the Board of Trustees.

The committee responsible said the $1.5 million proposal despite a working from the faculty will not be able to complete before next year because of student housing as a whole across campus, moving the athletes out of dormitories and believed solving the serious problem of storage areas converted to rooms and 95 vacant graduate dorms; however, both sets of improvements were made this past year. The committee said the dorms, he said, tend to be overcrowded, and hard to refer the density required in the student dorms.

In reference to re:his housing, the committee recommended to the executive committee that student housing be available for the faculty, and that the committee work on the problem of providing dormitories for graduate students as a whole should be done.

The conference also recommended that the executive committee consider carefully the long-range planning of the Board of Trustees.

The conference was attended by the president and the executive committee, and with the president and with the executive committee, and with the students at the University of Arkansas.

Reagan's ax cuts funds for Museum of Man

The $27,000 U.S. grant represents the museum's operating budget in 1986, Banks said. The university provided an expanded budget to compensate for the loss of federal funds, allowing for research projects and new exhibits.

The first U.M.S. grant in 1981 was a breakthrough for the museum, Banks said. It was allocated for the first time for the purchase of equipment that could be adapted for handicapped use.

"Just the running expenses, the museum has to provide that," Banks said. "We've been able to do it, but it's a very generous grant." The university, which is one of the biggest fund raisers in the state, has committed money to continue the grant.

Banks explained that the grant will be used to purchase a new computer system for the museum. The system will include a new database of exhibits and a new way to track the pieces on display.

Mary Bell Frye, a special education teacher at the school, said the grant will allow the museum to continue to provide educational programs for handicapped students.

"We're very grateful," she said. "It's a lot of money for something like this."

Campus improvements accommodate handicapped

President James Gorham, who is physically handicapped in a wheelchair, has made it a high priority to make the campus more accessible to handicapped students.

"We have a responsibility to provide access to all campus buildings," Gorham said. "We are making a commitment to handicapped students, as well as to all students of the university."

There are several ways to get around campus, including the new UML on the 10th floor, which is equipped with handicapped facilities.

"The goal is to make the campus as accessible as possible," Gorham said. "We are constantly looking at ways to improve our facilities and services for handicapped students."

The University of Massachusetts is one of the few universities to have a special center for handicapped students.

A comparative study of other universities has led the department of public safety to reduce its student safety officers to a full-time staff of 10.

Chief security officer Alex Hill, III, implemented the study which "identifies the police officers who are needed," according to Banks.

"We're following President Reagan's rule," Banks said.

Enteran planning at Bermuda Run

Scott Fitzgerald

The management of Bermuda Run's 700-acre Oxford area community has broken ground on a new $7 million executive center to be completed in the spring of 1982. The executive center is designed as an integrated network of education, conference and office space and the facility will house the sales and administration departments of Bermuda Run's development company, Travo Industries, owners of Bermuda Run. Travo Industries, founded by Winston-Salem businessmen into a time share program in the early 1970s, now includes over 10 acres and will soon have over 250 people on its payroll. It will be comprised of several individual educational, recreational and entertainment facilities, including a conference center, tennis courts, pool, day spa and botanical garden.

Each will have video and audio capability, and the facility's design was the result of a study of how to incorporate the various facilities and specialties of each company's needs. The management of Travo Industries is a long-time friend of several area developers.

BESIDES the entire conference facility, there will be a 400-seat theater, as well as golf and

Art vandals condemned

The most recent trend in Wake Forest vandalism is the defacing of the yearbook. For years, the word yearbook has been synonymous with the fine art of picture photography. Those of us who are involved in publishing and selling the yearbook must admit that we are somewhat surprised by the recent rash of vandalism that has hit our campus. What's going on, and how have these vandals been able to slip under our radar screen unnoticed for so long?

The vandals' technique is not exactly a well-kept secret. First, only the administrators are given a copy of the yearbook for their personal possession. The student body is then asked to sign the yearbook in recognition of their contributions to the school. So, when the yearbook is turned in, all the administrators have a perfect copy, while the student body has a half-ruined, half-readable version.

In conclusion, I urge the administration to take this matter very seriously. The yearbook is a reflection of the school, and it deserves better treatment. I believe that the punishment for such acts should be severe, and that the vandals should be expelled from the school.

Sincerely,

The Executive Committee made a sensational decision last week. Considering the allegations that have been made in the past 30 days, this group of educators and administrators was under great pressure to take action. The million-dollar decision to build an athletic dormitory was not a decision to be made on a whim. The decision was based on the needs of men's housing which is a top priority for the university.

Ideally see this as a giant step forward in the movement of men's housing situation which has long been needed.

One reason society is so grossing is the rule limiting

It was a bright cold day in February 1984, and the computers were very much alive. Winston, the young artist, was walking along the hall, which smelt of beer and pipes, when he almost forgot about the world. Even in the best of times they were hardly working, and at present the water was turned off. It was part of the economy drive in preparation for the 1984 Winter Olympics. As Winston shuffled back to his room, he noticed that he was passing through the blinding sunlight that illuminated the Winter Olympics footprint.

Winston continued his idle ramblings for ten minutes around the corner, not at Mr. Lyle's direction. Claxton continued his idle ramblings for ten minutes around the corner, not at Mr. Lyle's direction. Before he noticed, he was standing in the crowd talking with some stranger who looked like Claxton.

"Hey, man, you really worth it ..." Mr. Claxton.

Mark, right? May I call you Mark? I'm Mark Dronzek, a junior, started doing free hand drawing last fall, tangling into the hall, which smelt of beer and pipes, when he almost forgot about the world. Netters lose twice

The Wake Forest women's tennis team fell hard last Friday night when the Demon deacons were defeated against Duke, 5-4, and North Carolina, 7-2.

Both, the Wake Forest men's team, which had cruised over Mercer, 6-3, and Columbus State, 9-0, were unable to achieve the same level of success against Wake Forest.

Tlie "Where are they now?" list continued with the story of Tom Williford, a former Wake Forest tennis player who is now playing professional tennis in Europe.

In the men's tri-meet, Wake Forest defeated Duke and stretched its record to 18-0 in the Triad area. The Deacons' fourth place finish in the ACC tournament was their highest ACC finish in years.

The latest statistics have shown that the Deacons' men's tennis team is one of the best in the country.

Due to the lack of male tennis players on the Wake Forest men's team, the Deacons have not been able to compete in the ACC tournament.

In addition to being at Duke, Williford is also scheduled to play in the upcoming U.S. Open.
