Wake TV is a highly selected university television service to be launched according to a document dated February 22, 1993, by the Office of the President.

Provided David Brown wrote the working paper of the university’s program planning committee to all faculty members in a communication dated February 19, 1993. The proposal was released to the student body on February 22, 1993, by the committee.

The document outlines the plans of the university, which is the main goal of the planning committee.

Among other recommendations, the proposal provides to make more recent courses available to students, including those courses which have been discontinued in the past.

In addition to the recommendations, the working paper states that the university should possibly consider merging television and film studies.

The document also explains the need for more faculty members in the field of television.

The university will be responsible for original programming and will be responsible for setting the standards of broadcasting.

Potestas computer lab closed due to removal of asbestos floor tiles

By Jennifer Gjusbek

In July, Physical Facilities and an outside contractor began removing all the tile from Power House and Poteas computer labs.

"The president of our old university, which is now the UNCG campus, is making the decision to replace the tiles and is scheduled for renovation next year," said the adviser. "The old computer labs will be replaced by an updated Killian Center computer lab." The renovation of the Killian Center will be moved to the all night study room in the second floor of the university.

The library is ready to receive the��件 from the Killian Center computer lab and new furniture was being ordered, Hunter also said some computers from Poteas lab will be moved to the Wake House lab, no longer available.

The personal computer from Wake House was added in 1994 with some new personal computers.

When Poteas opens, it will have more computers with hard drives that replaced the older ones. The largest problem the station faces is trying to find the computer than was not broken, don't fix it, "Our adviser said. William somebody in management probably will be the most hurdles to clear. The largest problem the station faces is the hard drive problem.

The increase in printing costs occurred when the Howler saw a number of problems that arise when trying to improve printing. "Williamson said the printing costs were continues. "Our adviser said. Williamson said there are more computers available, but those from the Killian Center will not change will be incorporated into the station's daily operation.

"It is important for the students to know that the station staff is working hard to improve the yearbook, Williamson said. The latter goal was more difficult by budget constraints. The administration will provide valuable experience for majors in the speech communication department will be beneficial to all concerned. A radio station can provide valuable experience for majors in speech communication, but will not define the station's goals or determine its selection.

"Our adviser said. Williamson said about 200 Howler have been moved to the Wake House lab, and one computer will be available.

Yeltsin calls for new elections

MOSCOW—Russian President Boris Yeltsin announced the Russian legislature's decision to hold early elections in December. Shortly before, the Supreme Soviet voted to remove President Alexy Batasov, an opposition leader, from the post of President. William. As four of the Yeltsin decree, Russian legislators decreed the order, calling for a general strike.

Boris Yeltsin said the situation was becoming intolerable, outlining the need for a new system of governance. President Bill Clinton affirmed his support for Yeltsin's move. Yeltsin said the situation was becoming intolerable, outlining the need for a new system of governance.

Frataternity Rush begins for fall

Fraternity Rush begins for opportunities to join fraternity began Sept. 19 and will continue next week, concluding Sept. 26. Rushing begins in the Professional Center at 9 a.m. Sept. 29 by signing up at the Interfraternity Council office and paying the $25 Rush fee.

Formal Standards for each fraternity were scheduled Sept. 15 through Sept. 16. Each of the 13 fractonaries is a time slot to hold its formal event, a coat and tie event at which rushees meet the fraternity brothers.

In order to rush in the fall, the man must be sophomores with a standardized grade average of 2.0 or must have a minimum of 2.0 grade point average last semester.

About 85 students are currently running for membership in the Phi Eta Sigma, president of Delta Sigma Pi Fraternity. A maximum of one student per fraternity is permitted to rush.

Full Rush is always held on spring Rush because the majority of sophomores rush their freshman year, said senior Cliff Ferrell, the Interfraternity Council president. "I wanted to wait to make sure I knew enough about the fraternities I was rushing, so I decided to make a decision about fraternities for next fall," Ferrell said. He also said for because he was waiting for fraternities he delayed his spring Rush.

The second phase of Rush began Sept. 17, when fraternities were permitted to schedule dry Rush functions such as cook-outs, sporting events, and tail-gates. Rushes will be held out on Sept. 26 and Sept. 27.

IMPORTANT SCHOLARSHIP OPPORTUNITY FOR FRESHMEN:

The James S. Kemper Foundation has designated Wake Forest as a participating institution in the Kemper Scholars Grant Program. Each year the Foundation selects one Kemper Scholar from among the freshman class, who will have the opportunity to renew the scholarship grant for subsequent years if certain academic and other performance levels are maintained. The grants range from a maximum of $6000 per year to a minimum of $1500 per year, based on the degree of financial need. Scholars are assigned by the Foundation to a summer work experience within the Kemper companies for each of their three undergraduate summers, and the willingness and ability to accept such summer employment is thus a requirement of selection. There is no obligation to work for Kemper upon graduation, though some of the over 1200 former Kemper Scholars now occupy positions of high responsibility in Kemper companies.

Nominees should exhibit a high degree of maturity, astuteness, and motivation, must maintain excellent academic record, and perform intelligently during the summer work experience. Scholar grantees choose academic majors relevant to business or compatible with a career in business. The Foundation defines such fields broadly to include business, accounting, communications, computer science, economics, and liberal arts.

Interested freshmen should obtain an application and program summary from the Dean's Office, School of Business and Accountancy, Babcock 110. The completed application, a complete high school transcript, and a letter of recommendation from someone who has been in a position of authority over you, must be submitted to the Dean's Office, School of Business and Accountancy, no later than 5:00 p.m. on Wednesday, October 20, 1993.
Students miss chance to voice their opinions

Student Government held elections on Tuesday in the Student Union. Translation of moderation was not turned out. It was nothing short of von cost though, meaning all of which are geared toward students who have been left out of nearly all the student council activities. Although the idea of dedicating weekends to the parents is a pleasant one, there is something to be said too much of a good thing. Parents. Weekend is a frenzy of activities, virtually all of which are geared toward students who have been left out of nearly all the student council activities.

In addition, the lack of attention given to students. Students were not even invited to participate in the student council meetings of nearly all the weekend. Some spend weekend hiding their alter egos

Wake Forest survival yet again with the passing of the weekend, or Parents. Weekend, as it is known to us. Parents. Weekend is the impromptu end of the spring semester. From afar, it is the time to get together our relatives in new burgundy. Membership has its privileges, and those should not be abused

Wade Solomon

I don’t have a well-thought-out answer for why we have so many fraternities on our campus, that’s something we’re all greening to. Perhaps it is due to the physical nature of the situation, deep sleep deprivation and alcohol binging that the pledges are forced to endure. I would say that more violence would be known of if the organizations did not screen their pledges for the desire of novelty that correlates with the willingness to participate in hazing. I am not implying that all, or even most of the Greek organization does not contain some form of abuse, yet I am suggesting that there are incidents of hazing and beating that are not recorded or reported. I have been a pledge at Wake Forest, there have been many abuse violations of the hazing policy.

For a large number of the organizations, the pledge is the most vulnerable and exposed to the orders of the brothers.

The hazing can occur to the extent that the brother’s wishes are not addressed.

I have heard incidents of physical abuse, sleep deprivation and alcohol binging that the pledges have been forced to endure. I would say that more violence would be known of if the organizations did not screen their pledges for the desire of novelty that correlates with the willingness to participate in hazing.

I am blessed and I never even realized it. As a 5 and 1/2 foot, right-handed girl I am completely average. Being on this campus I look different than my peers. I completely average things when I attend with my parents. Being a person of average appearance, I struggled to find a place where I belonged. As a college freshman I entered the university with the mindset of being untenable. But when I finally got here, the place was genau as I had pictured it. I liked the idea of being someone new. When we finally got here, the world seemed to turn right side up.

We came to college with the same interests and the same goals. We came to college to make friends and to learn. Everyone seemed so nice. Twenty minutes later I saw the food line. I was there with my parents, but everyone was walking away from me. I was embarrassed, but I also felt scared. I was scared to be alone.

We started the college year with the same goals in mind and the same goals we wanted to achieve. We were all looking for a place to be. Twenty minutes later I saw the food line. I had never been in a situation like this before. I was embarrassed, but I also felt scared. I was scared to be alone.

I’m done with theAssistant's response is clear and to the point, providing a comprehensive overview of the importance of membership privileges and the need to prevent abuse in Greek organizations. The text delves into the nature of college fraternities and their impact on the campus environment, highlighting the vulnerability of pledges and the need for strict regulations to prevent abuse. The author also connects the issue of Greek organizations with broader themes of inclusion and exclusion, touching on the experiences of average students in a college setting.

The text emphasizes the need for awareness and education to prevent hazing and promote a positive campus environment. It also highlights the importance of bystander intervention and the role of college administrations in addressing issues of abuse. The author encourages a shift towards a culture of respect and inclusivity, which can foster a more welcoming and supportive campus community. Overall, the response provides a thoughtful analysis that underscores the significance of addressing hazing and promoting a culture of respect and inclusion.

The purpose of this article is twofold: To alert students that their procrastination is not unique, and that they are not alone.

Dapkus practices the rare procrastination strategy of jumping. He says: "I've got to get going on this article!" but he still won't do it. He says: "If I could procrastinate about schoolwork then I'd be able to do research." He then goes out to eat with friends and never gets back to work.

But now we turn to a more serious outlook. Jane Morris Grant said, "The bad thing about procrastination is that you can't do it. You can't procrastinate about schoolwork to do it. But you can procrastinate about work that you have to do."

The true art of procrastination comes when you have exhausted all other avenues to procrastinate. It is only then that you can truly say that you have procrastinated. This could be called the "easiest" form of procrastination because it requires the least amount of effort.

Fidelio senior Krista Duplesis plays softball with the Kayne-Moody softball team.

Creative procrastination is always key, according to senior Kristen Zietok. Along the same lines, junior Adam Davis says that he tells himself, "I've done enough, I'm a pretty good guy. I think I could do my own thing." Senior Traci Cuthbertson expressed the opposite position of procrastination philosophy when she said, "Procrastination makes my work so much better."

Creative procrastination is used by students, there are certain steps to achieving high performance procrastination. However, these steps vary depending on the people to whom you talk. Senior Stephen White, an advocate of low-intensity procrastination, said, "I'm a pretty good procrastinator, but I've got friends to do it with."

Senior Kelly Clarke and Libby Barber seem procrastination as a necessary evil. Clarke says, "It's necessary. You do things better under pressure." Barber agreed and said she works better under a deadline. However, she went a step further and said procrastination was healthy. Senior Ryan Billings takes the pragmatic approach to procrastination rather than romanticizing it. It's pretty much: "basically, I know I'm going to do it, I just need the feeling of it." Clarke also told procrastinators are just the kind of people that don't have a budget or schedule their time.

Procrastination is an art form. It's like studying, you have to have a sense of concentration to do it," sophomore Kyle Ford said.

Hmmm, I wonder what is on TV.

The Bhuddist
First, in order to properly procrastinate, one has to be the proper type of student. Senior Joni LaCava said, "Don't go into debt, just procrastinate so that you are a procrastinator. I face my books and say into denial. Just face the fact that you are a stiff procrastination competition.

I have not yet sacrificed to the god of procrastination to reach the apex, and procrastinators become the stuff of legends that cannot be achieved elsewhere. Others have the old alumni at Homecoming talking of their old days where they didn't do their homework and it stays with you longer than those who procrastinate. Although you rarely hear of a Senioritis, it does exist.

By publishing this article at the beginning of the year, the students may get a head start on their procrastination.

"I don't procrastinate about schoolwork, I just don't know how to do it." Senior John Wehta said. "I procrastinate about schoolwork to do it."

Even those who claim they do not procrastinate about schoolwork do in other ways. Senior Kelly Figl said she really didn't procrastinate, but admitted she was procrastinating about looking for a job after college.

Senior Josh Harrison proves that you don't have to speak within your generation to procrastinate. Doing other things you haven't done is a little like judging a book by its cover. He said, "I procrastinate, then I go and do it."...
They Might Be Giants show dissipates fan frenzy

By MaryAnn Paz

"If you request any song, we're not going to play it," said John Flansburgh, co-founder of TMBG (They Might Be Giants), as he addressed the audience at the Wake Forest University Bailey Theatre on Friday, October 15th. The concert began with a medley for the eyes along with the popular "Why Does My Heart Feel Like a Blackbird" and the always-requested "Iowa." The band performed two selections from their latest album, "Dyslexic Heart," before continuing with their ever-popular numbers that have included "I Don't Want to Grow Up," "Bossy," "Ana" and "Baby," among others. With TMBG's non-traditional style of tongue-in-cheek humor, mixed with catchy hooks, the audience was left in fits of laughter and awe.

With only three weeks behind us in the semester, the Anthony Ames Players proudly presented a comedy to the virile dances of Macedonia, where Nolan feels that it is, in actuality, a rather disturbing play that has been written as a comedy to the virile dances of Macedonia, where Nolan feels that it is, in actuality, a rather disturbing play that has been written as a comedy to

The forty executives and dancers exhibited an amazing versatility in their ability to move from the fire and passion of the "Hurt" to the nonchalant and banking of "-love at first sight." The final song of the night was the popular "Life Is a Series of Decisions," which was performed with a high degree of virtuosity. Their juggling of voices and instruments was accompanied by a show that was both cleverly done and captivating.

Soccer splits pair of contests, loses 1-0 struggle to Virginia

By Ron Wohlers

Three goals, including one in the first half, proved too great an obstacle for the Deacons in their second and third contests of the regular season.

The Deacons started the season with a 1-0 loss to NC State on September 6 at Dowdy-Ficklen Stadium. The Deacons were also unable to come back against the Wolfpack in their second contest. The final score was 3-1, with the Deacons getting two goals from senior striker Michelle Williams and one from freshman forward Leslie Goodridge.

Despite the loss of Pfeifer, the Deacons continued to dominate the field. They outshot NC State 11-9, with eight shots on goal. The Deacons also took control of the ball, with 68% possession of the ball.

In their next game, the Deacons faced off against the Cavaliers. The game was a close one, with the Deacons winning 1-0 in a penalty shootout.

The Deacons played well throughout the game, with Williams scoring the goal that gave them the win. Despite the loss, the Deacons remained confident and focused on their next game against the Cavaliers.

The Deacons will face off against the Cavaliers again on Saturday, October 1, in their next home game. The game will be held at Spry Stadium, with kickoff set for 2 p.m.
