BELMONT — Few congregations, no matter their size or financial stability, boast a social worker on their staff.

But at South Point Baptist Church, the pastor and the social worker are one and the same — the Rev. Bill Abrams. A graduate of Gardner-Webb College and Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, he holds a master's degree in social work from UNC-Chapel Hill. He was a social worker in Morganton before accepting the Belmont pastorate.

"While I was earning my master's degree in religious education in seminary, I had a keen sense of Christian calling to the field of social work," Rev. Abrams said. "But although I served interim pastures and as a supply pastor, I couldn't get rid of the conviction that God wanted me in the pastoral ministry." Pastor of the Belmont church since 1977, Rev. Abrams has put to good use his social work experience.

Social work gives you a different perspective on people and their needs," the Baptist minister said. "It helps me to help people deal with family problems and even church-related issues.

"There's no doubt that the problems associated with drugs and the breakdown of the family require a lot of counseling. I find a little like Moses — my ministry has been verified."

And what the minister has learned as counselor he applies to his own home life.

"After I first came to Belmont, I came to realize as pastor I had a responsibility to my family," he said. "I think the pastor has to set the example as husband and father. Thursday night is family night for my wife Dianne and daughter Angie.

Religious Heritage

Your religious heritage is a feature devoted to the many facets of worship in this area. Each week, Gazette/Leslie reporter Elise Hamilton takes a look at one church or synagogue and its history, congregation and interesting facts.

The South Point church, which began in 1887 as a mission of First Baptist Church, has grown from a membership of 77 to more than 500.

"After I came here, we conducted a survey to find out who lived in this South Point area and to learn church preferences," Rev. Abrams said. "That's when our prospects began to grow. There is not a Baptist church beyond us, and over the years a number of housing developments have sprung up."

Rev. Abrams said he conducts a Discovery Class in which he teaches Baptist beliefs and practices to new members.

"We have discovered that you can't tell a lot about a church a church building," he said. "You have to get to know the pastor and the people and know what they believe."
