WHITE LEARNING & ACCOUNTABILITY SPACE

The Office of Civic & Community Engagement and Professional Development Center invite staff and faculty at Wake Forest University to interrogate whiteness and white supremacy culture, ask questions, discuss openly and authentically, and engage each other in a community of learning and accountability.

Dear colleagues,

On May 30, 2020, President Hatch sent an email to the Wake Forest University community, calling upon us to confront systemic racism. He reminded us, "We cannot ignore injustice or wish away racism and bigotry." Further, on June 9, he wrote, "Knowing that black lives matter must rise above the performative and perfunctory through deliberate, sustained effort."

In this spirit, the Office of Civic & Community Engagement and the Professional Development Center are launching a space for staff and faculty to learn about whiteness and white supremacy culture, discuss openly and authentically, and engage each other in a community of learning and accountability. This is a personal and professional development opportunity.

As a learning community, we will:

- Build competencies and skills related to anti-racism
- Advance personal resilience in conversations about race
- Develop accountability relationships with other white folks
- Increase bandwidth to offer and receive feedback
