half of them killed—the largest percentage of dead among casualties in all modern history—until finally the cruel weight of Russia's overwhelming numbers mocked the destiny of the land they loved.

Finland was bled white. But, only a year later, the Russians attacked the prostrate Finns again. The Soviet struck with 36 divisions. The Finns suffered 150,000 more casualties and, again, nearly half of them dead.

Yet go to Finland and you will find the Finns still fearless.
