from David Wilson

Dear Peace Haven Members & Friends,

I know for many of you the experience of the past several days has added new meaning to that old song, Keep the Home Fires Burning! Fortunately, our church building did not loose power for any significant period of time during the storm and the damage to the lovely trees around the campus seems to be minimal.

It appears that many of you did not fare as well. Some of you camped out here at the "Peace Haven Motel." Some of you bunked in with family or other Peace Haven members (including our Associate Pastor whose family took up temporary residence with the Normans.) Some of you toughed it out in that 19th century mode: no power, no central heat, water heated on the wood stove, meals cooked in the fire place, and in at least the case of our Deacon chairman and her husband--no water at all (no electricity to run the pumps from their well).

Winter storms have also taken a toll on the church's calendar. Since the first of the year, we have only meet for Worship three times and on Wednesday night for three times. I've lost track of the number of times we've had to re-schedule Church Council, and we will have to again for this Sunday at 4:00 pm. Below is our amended, adapted, erased and written in again schedule for next week--weather permitting, of course:

Friday, February 9th

6:00 pm 3rd-5th Grade Dinner at the Tamers

Tuesday, February 13th

7:30 pm Deacons Meeting

Saturday, February 10th

1:00 pm K-2nd Grade Cookie Baking

Wednesday, February 14th

6:00 pm Valentine's Dinner

Sunday, February 11th

9:45 am Sunday School¹
11:00 am Worship
4:00 pm Church Council
6:00 pm Youth Progressive Dinner²

Saturday, February 17th

6:00 pm Youth Adult Dinner

Stay warm, stay safe, and I'll see you at Church!

¹K-2nd Graders will see the movie The Greatest Story Ever Told. Parents please have your children here promptly at 9:45 am.

²Youth parents, don't forget to call Vicki to host one of the courses of the dinner. You may reach her at home (their power is back on) or call the Church Office: 765-7731.

Pastor to Begin Korean Bible Study Here

By VIRTIE STROUP
Sentinel Religion Reporter

A Bible study in Korean will begin here Sunday.

It will be held at 2 p.m. at Peace Haven Baptist Church, 1501 Peace Haven Road, which is sharing its building with the group.

The Rev. Seong Yoon Hyeon, pastor of the Korean Central Baptist Church in High Point, will be here to lead the Bible study and to give the opening lecture.

He has been in High Point four months, leading the three-year-old Korean congregation there. Services in High Point are held in Green Street Baptist Church — worship at 11 a.m. on Sundays and Bible study at 6 p.m. on Sundays followed by a brief service.

Koreans in Winston-Salem have been attending the services in High Point regularly. Hyeon (pronounced Shoon) said, "but they have asked me to have a Bible class for them in Winston-Salem. They usually can only attend one service each week (in High Point)," he added, "but they tell me once a week is not enough for them."

At the service here Sunday, Hyeon said, the High Point members will have a luncheon for the Winston-Salem group. "We will prepare the meal and then have the service," he said.

The staff and deacons of Peace Haven church have been invited to this event. The church voted recently to share its building with the Korean group, said the Rev. Floyd Helms, Peace Haven's pastor.

Hyeon said in a telephone interview

Churches and Religion

that his first lecture will be on "Buddhism and the Christian Faith."

He explained that most Korean Christians were first of the Buddhist faith. "Most of them," he added, "do not know well about Buddhism but still they were Buddhists."

He said his lecture will set out the premise of both faiths and he will conclude by showing why Christianity is the better faith.

During Sunday's session, he said, the group will decide when it wishes to have Bible studies.

Pat Bamba of Old Vineyard Road is among the local Koreans who requested Hyeon to hold studies here. She and others have been attending the services in High Point.

Mrs. Bamba said there is no way to accurately determine how many Koreans are in Winston-Salem. She has been in the city about a year and in America about 13 years. But she believes between 30 to 40 Koreans live here, "but we can't expect all of them" to come to the services.

The services will be in Korean and to help the Koreans a new sign has been put up at Peace Haven church: Peace Haven Korean Central Baptist Church. The name also is written in Korean.

Hyeon, 45, is a native of Seoul. His father was a Methodist preacher "and I was brought up in a preacher's family." He has one brother who is a Methodist preacher in Seoul and a brother-in-law, who is also a Methodist preacher.

In Korea, Hyeon said, "there are not many Baptist churches. Most Korean Christians are either Methodists or Presbyterians — the largest group of Christians are Presbyterians."

Hyeon was trained in the Methodist Theological College in Korea and served as a Methodist minister. He also taught German and philosophy at the Seoul College of Nursing. In addition to Korean, German and English, he speaks Japanese, Chinese and French.

In the early 1960s, he compiled a German-Korean Dictionary and translated German books into Korean. He has published a German text book entitled "Deutsche Sprache Fur Hochschule."

A friend, a Baptist minister, invited him to attend a Southern Baptist Theological School in Korea and eventually he taught there. As the result, he shifted his faith from Methodist to Baptist "because I thought it was much better."

For about 10 years, he said, he was a Baptist pastor in Korea, starting the Hae Seong Baptist Mission and HanSaem Baptist Church. During this time, he also published "Greek Philosophy" and taught philosophy and Greek at the Presbyterian Theological Seminary.

In the late 1970s, he studied at the Asian Center for Theology and Missiology, taught philosophy and English at the Theological School of Chinese and held lectures at the Theological Institute of Japanese Holiness Church.

He came to America in 1981 to study at the School of Ministry in San Diego, Calif. After that, he went to Odessa, Texas, where he was pastor of Korean Baptist Mission for 20 months.

In October, he came to High Point — "North Carolina is so much nicer" — and started preaching at the Korean Central Baptist Church, which has had two other pastors.

The church meets at Green Street, but is autonomous. It is a watchcare member of the Central Baptist Association. In October, Hyeon said, there were only 10 to 15 members, but 40 to 70 people participate in services now.

The church draws its members from High Point, Thomasville, Greensboro and Winston-Salem. It is estimated that about 300 Korean families live in the Triad, Hyeon said. The High Point group is the only Korean Baptist Church in the area; however, there are four other Baptist Korean churches in the state, Hyeon said. There are also Korean Methodist and Presbyterian churches in North Carolina.

Some day, Hyeon said, the High Point group hopes to have its own church, and it is likely this will happen here, if the congregations grow large enough.

Everything takes time, Hyeon said. One of the things he is working toward is bringing his wife and four children to North Carolina from Seoul "very soon."

New Pastor Due At Peace Haven

By VIRTIE STROUP

Sentinel Religion Reporter

The Rev. C. Floyd Helms Jr. will become pastor of Peace Haven Baptist Church May 1.

He will succeed the Rev. J. Spurgeon Hays, who served the church for 10 years before he accepted the pastorate at Morningside Baptist Church in Atlanta.

It will not be Helms' first time in Winston-Salem. He attended a local barber school and after graduating, worked at a barber and hair styling shop in Monroe.

He is the son of a Baptist minister, but being in the ministry was not his calling — that is until he grew tired of barbering and became dissatisfied in general.

His childhood sweetheart and now his wife, Collene Williams of Kershaw, S. C., said he seemed to be searching for something. When he finally decided to study for the ministry, the couple realized that was what he had been searching for all along.

Helms told the Peace Haven call committee that he suddenly realized "that many of those things of God and religion and the church that I thought I could do without . . . were far more important than I thought they were. Maybe it's just that I had matured both as a person and as a Christian."

He graduated from the University of North Carolina at Charlotte in 1963 and from Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary at Wake Forest in 1966 with two degrees, a master of divinity and a master of religious education.

He was ordained by the Wingate Baptist Church in December 1967 and became pastor of Mission Baptist Church at Stanfield in January 1968. He remained there until April 1974, when he became pastor of Center Baptist Church in Wade, where he now serves.

Helms told the call committee that he thoroughly enjoys preaching and teaching, but "my favorite role is that of pastoring. My preaching is a mixture of proclamation and pastoral. I believe in offering the opportunity for a commitment of faith or reaffirmation at the close of a service. I do not prolong the invitation. If the Holy Spirit has touched you, I don't have to beg."

Helms, 40, was born in Kannapolis. He and his wife have three children. Mrs. Helms is a reading aide in the public schools at Wade. She plans to finish earning a college degree here.

VOLUME VII

Number 32

J. Spurgeon Hays, Jr., Minister

Charles R. Settle, Youth Director

A great statesman of our country once uttered the statement, United we stand, divided we fall. Jesus Christ taught that if the world is going to survive, people must work together. The need for our own day is the need for togetherness.

The sole purpose of our Christian church is to provide a haven of safety from the problems, worries and fears of the average day. To accomplish this, its people must know each other, they must cry with each other and they must laugh with each other. The church must become a family. It must involve its self in ministering to the needs of its own people and to other people in the community of the world.

The essential unity of God is the lasting quality of our message of redemption. We believe in God, therefore we must believe in his purpose for each of us. We search, we long and we plead for unity, for the love and for the presence of God that can bind us into one.

It is only in unity of Christian love expressed in action to one another and to our community that we can survive. Without this love, we have no right to survive.

CHRISTMAS

CHRISTMAS IN AUGUST

Each year we are given an opportunity to participate in missions by supplying items which can be used by home missionaries in their work. Mailed during August, gifts may be used by missionaries through-out the year. This year the WMU is inviting each church family to participate in this opportunity to witness as we collect items from the list given to send to the Baptist Memorial Mission in Phoenix, Arizona. Mr. Samuel Hernandez, the missionary stationed there, works with people from lower economic bracket who suffer many crisis because of illnesses of lack of work from time to time.

Items needed include:

sheets, socks, pillowcases, shirts, towels, diapers, baby clothes, toothpaste, dress lengths (material) toothbrushes, medicines, pencils, T-shirts, Elmer's glue, first aid supplies, crayons and Good News for Modern Man.

Please bring items to the church and place in the box provided. It will be mailed August 24th.

DO NOT SEND USED ITEMS.

*10th Anniversary
1957-1967*

AUGUST 13, 1967

This is the dwelling at 832 Peace Haven Road which was the home of PEACE HAVEN BAPTIST (CHAPEL) CHURCH from 1957-62. It is now used as the parsonage.

HISTORICAL SKETCHES OF PEACE HAVEN

The Pilot Mountain Baptist Association sponsored the initial organizational meeting of a new church in the Sherwood Forest area on March 5, 1957 in the home of Mr. & Mrs. Harry L. Williams.

Weekly discussion and prayer meetings continued until the first Sunday service was held on August 11, 1957, when the group met in the dwelling shown above, with 39 members in Sunday school and 20 church members. South Fork and Clemmons Baptist Churches jointly sponsored the new chapel.

The chapel was constituted into a separate church on October 3, 1960, with 83 charter members, affiliated with the Southern Baptist Convention. The first service was held in the new church plant on August 5, 1962. The church has continued to grow and there is now a Sunday school enrollment of 375, and a church membership of 261.

One minister, Johnson Gupton, has been ordained by this church, and two have been licensed: Billy Washburn and Sammy Merrill. From the early days of the church, a full program of activities has been carried on.

In the way of property, the present church site was purchased in 1959 for $29,700 (6 lots). Church bonds were sold in 1961 in the amount of $135,000 to construct the present facilities. In March, 1967, two additional lots were purchased for $11,200. A new educational building is planned for and needed desperately.

CONGREGATION - FOURTH ANNIVERSARY - August 13, 1961

THE CHAPEL'S OCTAGONAL DESIGN

Hundreds of people have inquired concerning the unique design of the chapel. The style and shape of the first units grew out of a felt need facing the congregation---that of retaining the close-knit fellowship of the small group in the house to a more widely-spread layout.

This need was conveyed to our firm of architects---WILSON, McCULLOUGH and YEARGIN, of Charlotte---who came up with the answer in the octagonal chapel and modern education plant. This plan gave vent to even closer fellowship than in the old temporary quarters. The builder was FRANK L. BLUM CONSTRUCTION COMPANY, of Winston-Salem, including a number of sub-contractors.

The octagonal design also provides impetus for much symbolism for the worshipping congregation. The circular splay of pews brings a family style of worship. It tends to put the church family around the altar, thus giving every person a feeling of belonging.

In the words of our architect, Mr. McCullough, we do not prefer to think of our building as "Modernistic", but of modern or contemporary design.

From a need comes the octagonal design and from this design comes a symbol expressing a great truth of God---that God has a family and we are part of that family as we participate in some way, our own way, in this local church.

FULFILLING A CALLING: Wake Forest grad works with the poor

Taylor Field remembers his early days working in the Lower East Side of New York City, when a visitor to his storefront ministry asked him whether drugs were prevalent in the area.

Before Field had a chance to answer, someone else answered with their actions:

A hypodermic needle — discarded through an open window overhead — fell and barely missed Field as it landed on the pavement just inches away.

In the 10 years that he has been the pastor and director of the East Seventh Baptist Ministry/Graffiti, Field has found drugs to be an ever-present part of his poor, rundown neighborhood.

But hope, too, is becoming a part of the area filled with abandoned buildings, homelessness and hunger.

"In the early years I really felt overwhelmed," said Field, a 1976 graduate of Wake Forest University who also worked with young people at Parkway Presbyterian Church and the Salvation Army Boys' Club while he was in Winston-Salem.

He started working in New York after completing his education at Princeton University and Golden Gate Baptist Theological Seminary. Field said he would pass dozens of people in need as he would walk the six blocks or so from his home in Manhattan to the center.

"I was walking through their bedrooms; they were living in boxes," said the 41-year-old Field, who returned to Winston-Salem this weekend to lead a retreat for the members of Peace Haven Baptist Church.

During his first few years in New York, Field heard about people dying violently or freezing to death in abandoned buildings.

He said he once asked Mother Teresa how she could keep from feeling overwhelmed as she worked amidst tragedy. Jesus does not take a statistical view of life. If someone will care for just one person, Jesus will care for the 99 others. That simple message — of everyone just doing their small part — along with daily prayer and meditation helped Field survive those early years of his ministry and persuaded him to keep at it, he said.

The Graffiti ministry, named because of the artwork scrawled throughout the neighborhood, has grown since its beginnings in a storefront in 1974. It now operates from a church basement, and supporters recently bought an abandoned synagogue that they plan to turn into a sanctuary and new home for the center. Eleven other people also work for the ministry, and volunteers help out.

They tutor children, give adults' job skills through courses such as carpentry and art, train youth as missionaries, pass out soup and sandwiches to the homeless in parks, and give away clothing.

"We very much share that people can be transformed through Jesus Christ, a power beyond themselves," Field said.

He said he's seen that happen, including the pimp who has been in recovery for seven years and the children who are doing better than their parents. And the ministry's ability to buy the abandoned synagogue was a huge step, Field said.

Six members of Peace Haven Baptist Church visited New York last July to help Field and the others tear out walls in the synagogue.

The Rev. David Wilson, the pastor at Peace Haven, said that the Pilot Mountain Baptist Association, with which Peace Haven Baptist is affiliated, has a partnership with Graffiti.

Wilson's church is trying to do more outreach and missions work, and Wilson has been trying to get members to figure out their callings and think about how they can be met in all aspects of life.

Field arrived in Winston-Salem on Wednesday and has led two sessions for members of Peace Haven Baptist. His workshops will continue today, and he will preach at the church's 11 a.m. worship service Sunday. The service is open to the public.

"We're talking about finding and doing God's will, but with an emphasis on community service," Field said, adding that God has a call for each person.

"I think part of that call is finding that thing that makes your heart sing," he said.

Field said he grew up in Oklahoma as an "environmental Christian": faith was part of his environment, but it was not part of him. By the time he was a senior in high school, he said, it was not part of his life at all.

That changed in college, when he studied abroad in Germany for his junior year. The only literature he had that was written in English, he said, was a New Testament.

"Out of desperation I began to read it — something in English!" he said.

When Field returned to Winston-Salem for his senior year, he decided that law school wasn't what he wanted to do after all. He turned to trusted professors and leaders at Wake for advice, and he worked with the boys' club and the youth group at Parkway Presbyterian as he tried to sort out his life.

His decision to work with the underprivileged came while he was at Golden Gate in San Francisco, he said.

"I figured that my calling was expressing God's love in tangible ways — a sandwich, a blanket, (helping) people in difficult circumstances," Field said.

The Rev. David Ring leads a prayer during the recent "Youth Alive" celebration at Peace Haven Baptist Church in Yadkinville.

'Youth Alive' rally draws thousands to Peace Haven Baptist Church

By ANDY MATTHEWS
News Editor

YADKINVILLE — One by one they came forward, tears streaming down their cheeks as each approached the large stage.

Some held hands, collapsing in the arms of others. Choked with emotion, streams of boys and girls bowed their heads, asking for forgiveness. Clutching the Holy Bible, they whispered in hushed tones.

"Father, forgive me," one girl says.

"I accept Jesus Christ as my Lord and Savior," a young boy screams out.

The stirring scene was a fitting climactic ending last Wednesday night to the stirring words of the Rev. David Ring, a powerful evangelist whose call to arms brought a large crowd to its feet, singing and applauding his words.

As "Amazing Grace" played in the background, Ring embraced youngsters who stood in line to get a quick hug or a pat on the back. Ring stood patiently as the small crowd began to thicken.

In a matter of minutes, Ring was surrounded by admirers, treated more like a rock and roll star than a minister in a business suit.

"You should never be too busy," Ring shouted from the glass podium. "You can make the time. I wouldn't be here today if people hadn't made the time for me."

Ring was the featured speaker at last week's "Youth Alive" rally at Peace Haven Baptist Church, sponsored by Tim Lee Ministries. This year's theme was "Giving Honor To Whom Honor Is Due," honoring firefighters, emergency workers, police officers and veterans.

The weeklong event drew teenagers from Florida, Tennessee, Texas and even Idaho as well as several local youngsters.

Lee is a decorated Vietnam veteran, confined to a wheelchair after a land mine explosion took both of his legs. He travels around the country, preaching his message of redemption.

Born with cerebral palsy, Ring wasn't given much of a chance to live in a poor family in Arkansas.

He also travels around the nation, appearing on religious broadcasts including the Rev. Jerry Falwell's television program.

Ring said that he always managed to persevere even when his mother died. At one point, not long after his mother's death, Ring said that he contemplated suicide. But his sister wouldn't let him give up.

"I wanted to die," Ring said. "I gave up."

Ring's sister made sure that he kept going, stayed in school, and ultimately found others who took the time to make a difference in his life. He eventually went to church at his sister's urging.

"I didn't want to go to school and be made fun of," Ring said. "I kept asking 'If God loved me, why did God give me cerebral palsy?' I was doing a slow death. I finally went to church to get my sister off my back."

His voice choppy and erratic, Ring's message was difficult to follow at first. But he began to reach a rhythm as he clapped his hands, pacing back and forth on the stage.

"I'm here today because someone took the time . . . I can preach because someone made the effort," Ring said, his voice almost reaching a screaming pitch. "It doesn't take too much time to pray for someone; to make a telephone call; to knock on someone's door and say 'I'm thinking of you.'"

Ring gave a dramatic demonstration of how cerebral palsy affects his everyday life, getting the aid of a young man to help him drink a glass of water. He also needs the assistance of his wife of 20 years to button his shirts.

He's been preaching 29 years. "I'm having the time of my life all because someone took the time," Ring said. "Somebody made the effort, and last but not least, they gave me love. Without love, you're nothing."

Like an old-time tent revival, Ring and Lee urged converts to come forward at the end of the service. As small crowds of teenagers huddled together, Lee rejoiced. "People who think kids are going the wrong way all need to come down to Booger Swamp Road," Lee said. "These souls are changed for all eternity. They are off the road to hell and on the road to heaven."

After the service, in the church parking lot, Mark Hayes spoke intimately of his spiritual experience. A cancer survivor, Hayes said that he believes that God intervened, making sure he would hear Ring's message.

"I waited eight years to meet this man," Hayes said. "He's such an inspiration. He helped me get through that cancer. It was meant for me to be here tonight."
