DEACON SPOTLIGHT 13
Ron Lambert has spent most of his career being one of Wake Forest's best kept secrets on the football field, but this senior doesn't need his name in headlines to be successful. Today's Deacon Spotlight highlights this talented performer from Dania, Florida.

WHERE ARE THEY NOW? 49
It wasn't that long ago Bob Plemmons was wearing the Old Gold and Black as a member of the Demon Deacon baseball team. Today, he remains part of the Wake Forest community and this feature will bring you up-to-date on where he's been and what his plans are for the future.

WAKE WATCHING 53
The women's cross country team is ranked in the Top 25 and prepping for next weekend's ACC Championships. Today's edition of Deacon Dateline not only looks at the reason for this team's success, but also explores another possible reason for Wake's win over Vanderbilt two weeks ago.

ON CAMPUS 62-63
One of the most ambitious fund-raising efforts in school history is ahead of schedule. This two-page feature demonstrates how the Heritage and Promise Campaign is already making a difference in the lives of students and professors at Wake Forest.

Deacons And Cadets Highlight Homecoming Festivities

When Wake Forest departed Groves Stadium three weeks ago after a tough loss to Virginia, their record stood at 1-3 and most observers felt the next three weeks would be pivotal to the 1993 season.

Well, head coach Bill Dooley's team is alive and kicking after back-to-back road victories at Vanderbilt (40-6) and Maryland (30-23), and the Deacons come into today's Homecoming Day contest looking to make it three straight against the Army Cadets.

These two teams have gotten together fairly often over the last few years, having met four times in the last six seasons. The Deacons own a 3-1 record over that span, and a victory today would tie the all-time series at four wins apiece.

The last time Army came to Groves Stadium was in 1990 and Wake proved to be a rude host as it posted a 52-14 triumph. George Coghill returned a punt 72 yards for a touchdown and Todd Dixon caught a 31-yard TD from Keith West as part of the offensive show, and coach Dooley walked off the field with his 150th win as a college head coach.

A victory this afternoon would be No. 158 in his 26-year career, but for that to happen his team is going to have to contend with an Army team that, despite being 2-3 on the year, always plays hard.

The Deacon Report

Wake is riding high after last Saturday's come-from-behind win at Maryland, a game which wasn't decided until Ron Lambert intercepted a John Kaleo pass on the Deacon goal line with 26 seconds remaining. It was a banner day for the Deacon offense, which gained 418 yards of total offense, and the defense, which sacked Kaleo nine times for 72 yards in losses.

Red-shirt freshman Elton Ndama-Ogar has been a valuable member of the Demon Deacon offensive line this year. He played one of his best games last weekend in Wake's 30-23 victory over Maryland.

The kicking game was also a key late in the contest as punter Mike Green got off a pair of critical punts into a stiff breeze, which made the Terrapins task of catching up even more difficult.

Quarterback Keith West had a career day throwing the ball as he completed 17-of-30 attempts for 331 yards. It was the first time he had thrown for more than 300 yards in one game and the first time since Phil Barnhill passed for 321 against N.C. State in 1989.

West's big-play receiver last week proved to be a running back as Wendell Wells snuck out of the backfield to catch three passes for an even 100 yards. His first reception of 51 yards set up the first of John Leach's one-yard TD runs, which tied the game 7-7.

Another key man in the aerial assault was receiver Todd Dixon, who caught five passes for 92 yards, including a 49-yard touchdown in the early stages of the fourth quarter.

Ned Moultrie led the Deacon running attack with 52 yards while Leach and fullback Mitch Kennedy added 17 and 16, respectively.

But as effective as the offense was, their heroics wouldn't have been possible without the tenacious defensive pressure Wake applied to Maryland quarterback John Kaleo.

Senior defensive end Mike McCrary had a school-record four sacks while fellow end Maurice Miller added two of his own. Wake's bending defense did allow 501 total yards, but it also caused five turnovers (four interceptions and one fumble) to keep the Terps off the scoreboard.

All three seniors in the Wake Forest secondary had interceptions as George Coghill picked off two Kaleo passes, including one flat on his back, while Lamont Scales and Lambert added one each.

Green gave the team a lift late when he got off punts of 39 and 42 yards on Wake's final two possessions, and forced Maryland to go the length of the field to attempt the tie.

A similar performance from all three units will be needed once again today because Army has a number of players who have the potential to break a game open.

Scouting The Cadets

The Cadets come into today's contest after suffering their worst loss of the season one week ago to Rutgers, 45-10. Prior to that, Army had been in every game this season with its only other losses coming at North Carolina in the second week of the year, 22-9, and to The Citadel, 15-14, one week later.

The men from West Point started the season on a strong note with a 17-7 victory over Holy Cross, and then upended Lafayette 38-36 before losing to Rutgers last Saturday.

Today's contest marks the last road game for the Cadets, who will have their next four games at home prior to the annual Army-Navy game in Philadelphia's Veterans Stadium Dec. 5.

This year's Army team is young, but head coach Bob Sutton has done a solid job of filling in the holes after he lost 15 starters (10 offense, five defense) from last year's team which finished 4-7.

Offensively, the Cadets once again feature the wishbone attack, which has accounted for 81 percent of their yardage. Coming into today's contest, Army has rushed for 1,460 yards as a team while its passing attack has generated only 334 yards.

In fact, when the Cadets came to Groves two years ago, they threw the ball only three times and failed to make a completion.

The offense has opened up a little bit since then under quarterback Rick Roper, who has completed 18-of-32 attempts this season. But he has yet to throw a touchdown pass in 1992.

Roper has been most effective moving the Cadets on the ground, having rushed for 217 yards himself and four touchdowns. His two main backs have been fullback Steve Weber and halfback Chad Davis. Weber leads Army with 376 yards rushing, and has not been dropped behind the line of scrimmage in 86 rushing attempts this season. The other main threat has been Davis, who has 318 yards on the ground and is averaging a hefty 5.6 yards per carry.

Split end Paul Andrzejewski leads the Cadets in receiving with 12 catches for 148 yards while halfback Kevin Vaughn is the only other Army player with more than two receptions, having caught six for 83 yards.

The Army defense has allowed opponents an average of 238 yards on the ground this season while giving up nearly 160 through the air.

Senior Dan Davis anchors the defensive line and is one of the key returning starters from last season, when he started all 11 games. He had a career high 16 tackles against The Citadel and is among the team leaders in that category.

The linebacking corps is led by junior Jason Miller and Kevin Czarniecki. Miller led all outside linebackers with 51 tackles last season while Czarniecki ranked third on the team in tackles with 99. The secondary is filled with veterans in Mike McElrath and Duncan Johnson, a pair of seniors, leading the way.

Wake Forest On Homecoming

The Deacons have fared well on Homecoming the last few years, winning four of the last five contests.

Nichola Marshall was named 1991 Wake Forest Homecoming Queen.

That includes last year's 31-14 win over Duke, a victory that snapped a seven-game losing streak.

Overall, Wake is 20-24-1 on Homecoming, but most of those setbacks came in the 1970's when the Deacs went through one stretch which saw them lose six times and tie once. This is the second time in the last three years Army has been the opposition on Homecoming. In 1990, Wake Forest posted a 52-14 win before a crowd of 20,117.

A year-by-year look at Wake's record on Homecoming follows:

Around The ACC

There are three conference games taking place today in the ACC, and all of them are here in the state of North Carolina. In Raleigh, N.C. State is hosting Clemson; Chapel Hill is the site of today's battle between Georgia Tech and North Carolina; and Durham is where Duke plays host to Maryland. Virginia is hosting William & Mary in a non-conference game while Florida State, firmly entrenched in first place, has the week off.

Budget Car and Truck Rental

The Wake Forest athletic department would like to thank Budget for sponsoring this afternoon's Homecoming contest. As part of Budget Car and Truck Rental Day, many youth, church and civic groups are attending today's game, in addition to a number of radio affiliates that make up the Wake Forest Sports Network.

ON THE AIR

Wake Forest Sports Network

The 1992 Demon Deacons will be followed throughout their season by the largest radio network in Wake Forest sports history.

This year's coverage will extend across the entire state of North Carolina, with stations from the coastal plain to the western mountain regions, and cover most of southern and western Virginia as well. In all, more than 30 stations—a significant increase from last season and nearly double the size of the network two years ago—are scheduled to be a part of Wake Forest Football in '92.

Handling the play-by-play for the third year in a row is Mac McDonald, who brings his listeners onto the field with a descriptive and colorful commentary that is both informative and entertaining. A familiar figure around the ACC since serving as the radio voice of the Virginia Cavaliers from 1980 through 1985, McDonald was twice named sportscaster of the year in the state of Virginia.

McDonald coordinates all aspects of the Wake Forest network in his new position with International Sports Properties, a newly founded company headed by former WFU assistant athletic director Ben Sutton.

Working closely with McDonald on the air as the Demon Deacon color analyst is Karl Noonan, also entering his third year in the Wake Forest booth. The former Miami Dolphin receiver shares insightful comments with his listeners throughout each broadcast, mixing effectively with McDonald's play-by-play call.

The third member of the Wake Forest radio crew has the most experience with Demon Deacon Football. He is Glenn Scott, one of the Winston-Salem/Greensboro area's most popular radio personalities through his morning show on WSJS radio, the flagship station of WFU sports. Scott is extremely familiar with the traditions and history of Wake Forest—in fact, he's part of that tradition himself by virtue of his many years with the network—first with WFU Hall of Fame member Gene Overby, and now with McDonald.

McDonald and Coach Bill Dooley also co-host every Sunday during the season the "Wake Forest Sports Sunday" television show.

The fast-moving 30-minute production, which includes game highlights, player features and other topics of interest in the WFU Athletic Department, is skillfully photographed and produced by Scott McBurney of WGHP-TV in High Point and airs across North Carolina via that outlet, as well as across the nation on cable networks such as Home Team Sports and SportSouth.

THE WAKE FOREST FOOTBALL RADIO NETWORK CREW: Karl Noonan, Chris Ferris, John Brockwell, Mac McDonald, and Glenn Scott. Clint Gentry is not pictured.

Deacon Joy Is Twofold After Win At Maryland

by John Justus

Last Saturday brought the finest in college football to College Park, Maryland.

The sun was shining brightly. An enthusiastic "Homecoming Day" crowd filled a goodly portion of Byrd Stadium on the University of Maryland campus, while on the field before them, two football teams whose mettle had been tested by difficult early season schedules battled as if for a championship.

If you're a Wake Forest fan, the day ended happily, too. The Demon Deacons rallied from a 23-14 deficit in the third quarter to score 16 unanswered points and defeat the Terrapins, 30-23, for their first ACC win of the season.

Last Saturday also brought perhaps the most difficult in college football.

Beneath that warm sun, within easy sight of the 30,000-plus fans, in the midst of the competing sides—seeming tragedy befell the Wake Forest team.

The Deacons had just scored to reduce the Maryland advantage to 23-20. The Terps began the ensuing possession on their own 20-yard-line with 35 seconds left in the third period.

Terrapin quarterback John Kaleo handed the ball to running back Doug Burnett, just as he would do on 14 other occasions during the afternoon. Burnett sliced through an opening in the Wake Forest defensive line to gain nine yards before disappearing beneath a mass of white-jerseyed bodies at the Maryland 29.

Second down, one yard to go. Coaches on both sidelines were already relaying formations and play selections to the players on the field. Burnett and the tacklers around him slowly unpled. All but two.

The clock showed 0:21. Fifteen minutes later, it had not changed.

"I was standing on the sidelines and saw the play but really wasn't paying that much attention," Deacon offensive lineman Tommy Mordica says. "Then we all saw that Willie (Hall) and Gleen (Hart) didn't get up."

"As a football player, you're accustomed to seeing guys down, but not like that. Gleen moved his legs a little—I thought maybe he just had the air knocked out of him—Willie didn't move at all."

"Scott Shelhamer had been watching more closely because he is a defensive player (linebacker). He came over and told me it was serious."

Hall, a sophomore from Delray Beach, FL, and Hart, a junior from Tarboro, NC are both defensive ends, though play different positions. Hall is a backup to Mike McCrary at the "rush" end; Hart follows Maurice Miller at the "drop" end slot in the Deacon defensive scheme. They were on the field together, providing their teammates who are starters a brief rest while Maryland was backed up in its own territory.

Shelhamer was right. Both were injured seriously.

"I barely missed making the tackle at the line of scrimmage, but he (Burnett) slipped past me," noseguard Dred Booe recalls. "I turned and saw everyone getting up, then I saw Willie just roll off onto his stomach. Gleen was lying there, too, but he was moving. Willie wasn't."

Wake Forest head athletic trainer Steve Yates was the first medical professional to reach the injured players.

"Anytime you run out on the field, you don't really know what you're going to find," Yates, a 21-year sports medicine veteran, says. "You have to first ascertain what the injury is. Dr. (Phil) Wessinger (chief sports medicine resident in orthopedic surgery from Bowman Gray) and I reached the two players and almost at the same time looked at each other and said 'I've got a neck (injury)'."

Any neck injury demands special precautionary measures, Yates adds. Medical personnel are instructed to treat any damage to that part of the body as potentially severe until proven otherwise.

Such was the case, or cases, now. Both players were conscious and identified their injuries as neck-related. Gleen had immediate movement in his arms and legs. Willie did not respond as well.

The two Deacons were taken from the field in similar fashion, affixed rigidly to stretchers, but were transported to different locations by different means. Hart went to nearby Prince George's County Hospital in an ambulance. Hall, whose preliminary diagnosis was more serious, was dispatched via helicopter to the University of Maryland Shock Trauma Unit in Baltimore.

"We were in the huddle when we saw the helicopter taking off with Willie minutes later," Mordica says. "I think it was John Leach who said then that every play the rest of the game had to be for Willie and Gleen. It wasn't just another ACC football game from that point on."

Mordica and his offensive teammates put 10 points on the scoreboard in the fourth quarter. McCrary and Miller went the rest of the way without a break and kept the Terrapins out of the endzone as the Deacons rallied valiantly for the seven-point win.

Steve Yates doesn't remember much of it.

"My mind was in sort of a blur the last few minutes of the game," he admits. "Once the emergency treatment was completed, about a million more things start going through your mind in an instance such as this.

"Someone has to be with the players, but who will go and how will they get there? What about the rest of the team after the game and on the way home? Who stays, who goes?"

"We need to call the families, of course. What do we tell the coaches and other players? What about the media? You are already in a very anxious situation and you simply can't speculate."

Yates' many questions were answered in part by the outstanding assistance provided by University of Maryland officials (medical staff and sports information), along with the local law enforcement agents, who provided transportation, and the hospital personnel.

Actually, the first positive reports regarding both players reached the team before they left Byrd Stadium. Everyone was thankful to know that Gleen would meet the squad at the airport to fly home with them and that the initial reports on Willie were positive as well, though he would be kept in Baltimore overnight.

"The lockerroom after the game was almost like we had lost," Booe says. "No one really felt like singing the fight song. Everyone just wanted to know about Gleen and Willie—they were more important than a win."

James Webster, who himself suffered a broken neck as a senior at North Carolina in a 1971 practice drill, coaches both Gleen Hart and Willie Hall. He watched the entire scene unfold from the coaches' booth in the pressbox.

"When you see one of your players taken off the field on a stretcher, it's so different from any other injury," Webster says. "There's so much uncertainty involved and you usually fear the worst."

"Gleen and Willie are both tough kids. I knew when I saw them lying there that they must be hurt seriously. I felt for them just like it was my son out there. When something like that happens, you stop thinking like a coach and start feeling more like a parent."

Webster has a 14-year-old son, Kali, who plays junior varsity football. The Deacon coach says he worries about him all the time.

Gleen Hart and Willie Hall have family, too, who today can be truly thankful that their sons should be back to normal activity within two-to-three weeks.

There are also nearly 100 Wake Forest football players, including Hart and Hall, who share that joy, and who can now look back on October 17, 1992 as a wonderful day to be a college football player—and to be alive and well.

Coming Out Of The Shadows

By Dan Zacharias

For the past couple of seasons, Ron Lambert has been one of the most valuable players Wake Forest has had in its defensive secondary. But mention the name, and most people probably couldn't tell you who Ron Lambert is, or what position he plays.

"I kind of call myself The Forgotten One," laughs Lambert, who is starting his 24th consecutive game this afternoon against Army. "It used to bother me a couple of years ago because, at times, I didn't feel like I got the credit I deserved. After awhile, though, I just decided to keep working hard because I knew good things would happen."

Last week was a perfect example of that philosophy. With Maryland driving for the potential tying or winning score, Lambert intercepted a John Kaleo pass at the Wake two yardline to preserve the victory.

Lambert can't really be blamed for getting a bit frustrated about the lack of attention because it has seemingly gone on throughout his entire high school and college career.

During his prep days at McArthur High in Dania, FL, Lambert was one of the school's best all-around athletes, starting for both the football and basketball teams. He blossomed into a college prospect in each sport his junior year, but there were two other players who seemed to grab all the local headlines. Errict Rhett and Greg Davis were being recruited by a number of major universities, leaving Lambert in the background.

Rhett signed with the University of Florida and led the Southeastern Conference in rushing last year, while Davis was a three-year starter for Notre Dame in the defensive backfield.

"Everything Errict did in high school overshadowed what I did, and here I'm overshadowed by what George (Coghill) and Lamont (Scales) do," says Lambert. "All of those guys are versatile athletes and deserve the recognition they've gotten over the years. It would be nice to always be noticed, but I don't worry about whether or not I'm going to get the media attention because that's not the reason I play football. I love this game and I think that's reflected in the way I play."

For the last two years, Lambert has ranked third on the team in tackles, and has also been among the leaders in interceptions and passes broken up. His versatility is one of the reasons he has been so successful. The best example of that came last year when he was forced to move from his normal cornerback position to free safety for eight games after Scales broke his arm making a tackle against N.C. State.

He gained the enthusiasm for football when he was only six years old, playing in the street with a group of neighborhood friends. He enjoyed running around and catching passes, but all of that changed when he joined his first organized team — the Southside Raiders of Savannah, GA.

"In our first practice, the coach told me I was going to be the center," starts Lambert. "Well, after I hiked the ball I went out for a pass because that's what we did in the streets. When I came back to the huddle, the coach said I couldn't do that. I didn't think it was much fun just hiking the ball and blocking, so I moved to running back."

"The first time I carried the ball, I got hit hard — too hard," continues Lambert. "I didn't like that, so I moved to receiver and ended up enjoying that much better."

When Lambert has time off the field, he likes to go around and speak at local schools as part of Wake Forest's Athletes Care Council, a 12-member body which charts the direction of the Athlete's Care Team. A radio-television speech major, Lambert has been refining his public speaking skills and says having the opportunity to address kids is something he takes as seriously as football.

"I want to make a difference in somebody's life," says Lambert. "If I could make a career out of giving talks to kids, I would because there are a lot of young people who don't have a direction in life."

Lambert is doing his best right now to give some area kids that direction they need. He is involved in a program at Independence High School, which is the last resort for students who have had problems at other schools in Forsyth county.

"I think a lot of these kids pay attention to some of the things I say because I've experienced many of the problems they're faced with and can relate to what they're going through," says Lambert. "I tell them that they've got the resources to be anything they want to be, all they have to do is apply themselves."

One of the people who has been impressed with Lambert's enthusiasm in this area is Charlie Davis, Wake Forest's director of community relations.

"Ron came and asked if he could get involved with some of the different projects we were involved in, so I took him to one school and he spoke to a group of kids," recalls Davis. "About a week later, he came into my office and literally begged me to give him more opportunities to go out and speak. He had a message written out that he wanted to share, and he's most effective."

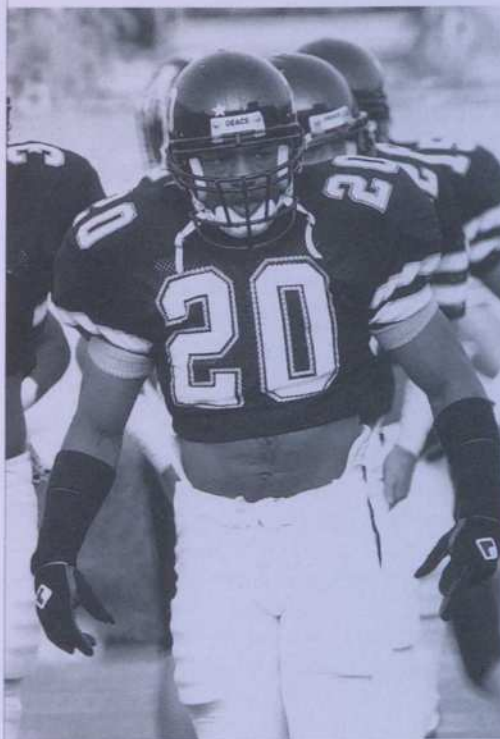

"The kids listen to what he has to say," adds Davis. "The best way I can describe Ron is to say he's a leader. He's a quiet leader, but a leader."

Last spring Lambert helped out as a volunteer when the Special Olympics held their yearly event on the Wake campus, and this year plans on doing his share with the Santa's Helper program.

"It's a great feeling anytime you can bring joy to someone less fortunate than yourself," says Lambert. "I had never been involved in something like the Special Olympics before, but when you see how happy you can make those kids, it makes you want to get involved even more."

When Lambert graduates this summer, he would like to continue his football career in the professional ranks while remaining involved with his community-related activities. And even if that doesn't happen, he plans to remain connected with sports in some manner, either as a broadcaster or coach.

Regardless of which profession he ends up in, Ron Lambert will be just as valuable as he has been to the Wake Forest football team these past four years. The only difference is he probably won't be known as The Forgotten One.

Ron Lambert has been an integral part of Wake's defense ever since he arrived on campus as a true freshman. He started three times that season and has been a regular in the defensive secondary ever since.

THE COACHING STAFF

Head Coach Bill Dooley

Give anyone who has ever known Bill Dooley one word which would most accurately describe him and the overwhelming choice would be competitors.

That competitive spirit is one of the main ingredients which has made him so successful over the course of his 25-year head coaching career, and one of the reasons he was picked to lead the Wake Forest football program in 1987. He enters the 1992 season as the 11th winningest coach in the nation with a career record of 154-122-5 and is one of only 11 active coaches on the Division I level with more than 150 victories.

Last year he spent his 174th game as an Atlantic Coast Conference head coach—the most in league history (he's presently at 179). Only two other men have ever won more games in the ACC, and with the beginning of the 1992 season—his 17th in the league—no individual has coached more seasons in the ACC than Bill Dooley.

Thirteen of his teams have won seven-or-more games, an achievement he has reached at three different schools. Nine times he has guided his squads to bowl games.

There were probably few who believed such a record would be possible when Dooley first started out on the collegiate level. It wasn't that he didn't possess the knowledge or other qualities a head coach needs, but he always seemed to be accepting the challenge at a school which was in the process of rebuilding.

Such was definitely the case upon his arrival in Winston-Salem, as he was greeted with forecasts of a last-place ACC finish and the prospect of winning only a couple games each of his first two seasons.

He proved those skeptics wrong as he led the Deacons to a 7-4 mark in 1987 and a 6-4-1 record the following season. That represented only the second time since 1952 the Deacons posted back-to-back winning seasons. Wake Forest finished each of those years 4-3 in ACC competition, marking the first time the school ever had consecutive winning seasons within the conference.

And even though that success hasn't been as evident from a won-lost standpoint the past three years, another Dooley trait has also been evident. Regardless of the score, the Deacons have always played hard. Opposing coaches know that Wake Forest is the second-smallest school competing in Division I-A football, but they are also aware Dooley will have his team prepared.

His preparation as a coach began during his playing days as an offensive lineman at Mississippi State, two of those years under highly respected head coach Darrell Royal. He was named All-Southeastern Conference both his junior and senior seasons, and officially closed out his college career by being named the Shrine Bowl's top lineman.

A member of the MSU Hall of Fame, Dooley started his coaching career by leading the Bulldog freshman team and assisting the varsity squad as line coach. After five years in Starkville, and a quick two-season stint under Jim Camp at George Washington, he was hired as the offensive coordinator at Georgia by his older brother Vince.

The Dooley Family — Coach Dooley, seated with his wife Marie and their son Sean. Standing behind them are the coach's sons Jim and Billy.

The Dooleys led Georgia to a pair of bowl games in their first three years together and were building a program which was gaining national notoriety. That's when North Carolina came knocking at Bill's door, asking him if he would be willing to inherit a Tar Heel program which had known only three winning seasons and one bowl appearance in the previous 20 years.

Dooley accepted that challenge and proceeded to give fellow Atlantic Coast Conference coaches nightmares because of his relentless work on the recruiting trail. He built Carolina into a yearly conference contender and a regular visitor to postseason bowl games.

"Bill Dooley turned ACC football around," said former Virginia coach Don Lawrence. "He came into this league and worked around the clock to build a fine program. Everybody else started working overtime to catch up."

Recruiting has always been the key to having a quality program, according to Dooley.

"What you're looking for are people who want to excel — excel in the classroom, excel on the field, excel in anything they undertake," he says. "Everyone can know a blue-chipper, but it's the other little things that make a difference."

"A player may not be as big or may not be as fast, but if he has pride, has character, and comes from a good family background and wants to be successful, that's what it boils down to. If you can find that type of individual, they'll be successful and your program will be successful."

While at UNC, the young head coach first became titled "The Trench Fighter," a fitting sobriquet that has followed him to this time.

Shortly after beginning his tenure as the head man with the Tar Heels, Dooley had been asked what he missed as a head coach after serving as a successful assistant for 11 seasons. His reply was "(I miss) getting on my hands and knees and giving the players individual instruction. A head coach is busy directing the overall operation and has to leave that to the assistants. To me, that was always the most fun of all—getting down in the trenches with the men."

Dooley carried that nickname and that fighting spirit throughout his 10-year stay in Chapel Hill, where his teams won three ACC championships (1971, 1972 and 1977) and went to six bowls. He left North Carolina with a record of 69-53-2, at that time the school's all-time winningest mark.

From there he took on another rebuilding project at Virginia Tech, where the Hokies had experienced only three winning seasons and one bowl appearance the previous 10 years.

Dooley's formula for success continued in Blacksburg as he put together winning seasons from 1980-86. His 1983 team compiled a 9-2 record, which matched the school record for most victories in a season in 78 years. He later broke that mark in his final year as the 1986 team finished 10-1-1 after beating N.C. State in the Peach Bowl. Like at Carolina, he left Virginia Tech as the school's all-time winningest coach with a record of 64-37-1.

Two of the most famous players Dooley coached during his times in Chapel Hill and Blacksburg were Lawrence Taylor and Bruce Smith. Taylor was recruited to North Carolina by Dooley and is recognized as one of the greatest linebackers to ever play in the National Football League, while Smith, a Tech product, is creating a similar reputation at defensive end.

"He's a very smart man, very positive," said Smith, who won the Outland Trophy in 1984 as the nation's top lineman. "He's good from the standpoint that he's a person a player can look up to as a coach. He was always fair. If you didn't go to class and he found out about it, something was done. There was always discipline."

It's that dedicated approach which has turned Dooley into one of the most respected coaches in college football today. Sandy Kinney has been an assistant under Dooley all of his 25 years and has an opinion as to why he is successful.

"Coach Dooley relates a lot of football to what will happen later in life. You have a job to do and he expects you to do it and there's no excuse," reasons Kinney.

"That's the same way off the field, if you're supposed to go to class, you go to class. If you have study hall, you go to study hall. There are no excuses and the players appreciate that when they come back later on."

In the end, however, the main reason for Dooley's success comes down to that one word again — competitor.

"In football, in recruiting, in racquetball or in tennis, whatever he's doing he's going to try his darndest to be the very best," says Kinney. "He believes in hard work and sticking with the fundamentals."

"If you don't think that's the right way to go about it, all you have to do is check his record. When you do that, I think you've got to say he's done it before, he can do it again."

ASSISTANT COACHES

Defensive Coordinator/ Linebackers

Bob Brush

The chief assistant coach on the defensive side of the ball for the Demon Deacons is Bob Brush, who for the fourth consecutive year is the team's defensive coordinator and linebacker coach.

Brush, 49, joined the Wake Forest staff in 1989 after two years as defensive coordinator at Tulsa. He had previously filled that same key role for three years (1984-86) under Bill Dooley when Virginia Tech was compiling one of the country's top defensive records. During the '84 season, Brush's first at Tech, the Hokie defense was second nationally in scoring and rushing defense and placed third in overall defense. Five members of that defensive unit were NFL draftees.

A native of Cherry Hill, NJ, Brush graduated from Rutgers where he played both linebacker and fullback. He earned a masters degree from Maryland, while beginning his college coaching in 1969 as a graduate assistant.

Brush also coached at VMI (1971-74) and Duke (1975-76) before becoming defensive coordinator at West Texas State in 1977. He helped the Buffaloes to Missouri Valley titles in '77 and '79, then moved on to Vanderbilt, where his 1982 defense was first in the nation in turnover margin—a key factor in the Commodores reaching the Hall of Fame Bowl that year.

Brush and his wife Bunnie have two children—Tammie, 20, a junior at Wake Forest who works as a student assistant in the sports information office; and Lee, 18, an all-district football player and a standout in track at West Forsyth High School.

Offensive Coordinator/Line

Eddie Williamson

Eddie Williamson, a former head coach at VMI, joined the Wake Forest program for the last season and made an immediate impact as the team's offensive line coach and offensive coordinator. His work with a young line that had only one senior (a reserve) among its top 10 players was instrumental in the offensive unit's improvement during the year.

Williamson, 40, is a 17-year veteran of coaching on the collegiate level. His initial experience as a fulltime professional with intercollegiate athletics, however, came in 1976 when he served as academic counselor at North Carolina under a familiar figure—current Deacon head coach Bill Dooley.

A native of Pendleton, SC, Williamson graduated from Davidson in 1974 after lettering three years as a linebacker for the Wildcats and serving as team captain during his senior year. He then earned his masters degree at Furman and also served as a graduate assistant coach in 1974-75.

After his year in Chapel Hill, Williamson returned to the Paladins in 1977 to begin his career as an assistant coach. He coached at Duke from 1978-82, then gained two valuable years on the staffs of Grant Teaff (at Baylor in 1983) and Vince Dooley (at Georgia in 1984). From there, he progressed to VMI and headed the Keydet program from 1985-1988. In 1989 and 1990, Williamson coached the offensive line at South Carolina, then came to Wake Forest in March of '91.

Williamson and his wife Patricia have three children—Eddie, 11; Carrie Beth, 9; and Tricia, 5.

Defensive Backs

John Gutekunst

The newest member of the Wake Forest staff is John Gutekunst, an experienced and knowledgeable veteran of the college game as both an assistant and head coach. He joined the Demon Deacons in July and will be working with the team's defensive backs this fall.

Gutekunst, 47, is not unfamiliar with the Atlantic Coast Conference or Wake coach Bill Dooley, however. The 1966 Duke graduate has competed as a player and coach in the ACC, and also worked under Dooley as an assistant coach at Virginia Tech.

While with the Blue Devils, Gutekunst was a standout in both football and baseball, serving as a captain on both squads as a defensive back and centerfielder respectively. He began his coaching career at Duke as a freshman coach, eventually working on both sides of the ball during a 12-year tenure there.

Gutekunst joined Dooley's staff at Tech in 1979. Two years later he became defensive coordinator for the Hokies—a role he held until accepting the same position at the University of Minnesota in 1983. While at Virginia Tech, Gutekunst's defensive units ranked among the best in the country, leading the nation in rushing defense in 1982 and 1983, and in scoring defense in '83 as well.

At Minnesota, Gutekunst took over a defense that had allowed the most points in the country in 1983 and built a unit that rated among the tops in the Big Ten two years later. In December of 1985, he was named head coach of the Golden Gophers and led his team to an Independence Bowl win over Clemson later that month. Four of his six Minnesota squads had winning records, though he was 29-37-2 overall at the school.

The new Deacon coach has three sons—Brian, 19; Michael 17; and Jon, 14.

ASSISTANT COACHES

Wide Receivers

Bill Maskill

Entering his third season at Wake Forest is Bill Maskill, a 20-year veteran of the collegiate coaching ranks who takes over the Deacon wide receivers this fall.

Over the past two years, Maskill has constructed what should be one of the finest defensive backfields in the ACC for the 1992 campaign. His prize pupil, George Coghill, is a returning All-ACC performer at cornerback from a season ago.

For two years prior to becoming a Deacon, Maskill, 43, served as head coach at Southeast Missouri State, where he guided his teams to an overall record of 13-8. His 1988 squad captured the Missouri Intercollegiate Athletic Association championship with a 6-4 mark; his '89 club improved to 7-4.

Prior to his stint at Southeast Missouri, Maskill enjoyed an impressive career as an assistant coach at a number of schools, working primarily with defensive backs and linebackers. He has coached at Northern Michigan (1972-73), Bowling Green (1974), Vanderbilt (1975-77), Arizona State (1978-79), Louisville (1980), Tulane (1981-82) and Oregon (1983-87).

Maskill lettered two years as a quarterback at Western Kentucky where he earned his undergraduate degree in 1971. He went on the following year to earn his masters degree while serving as a graduate assistant at Iowa. His father, Bill, head coach at Galesburg-Augusta High School, is the winningest high school coach in the state of Michigan with more than 270 career victories.

Maskill and his wife Mary Helen have a son Hunter, 10, and a daughter Jaime, 5.

Quarterbacks

Jerry McManus

A quarterback on Deacon teams of the mid-1970s, Jerry McManus returned to Wake Forest in 1987 with head coach Bill Dooley as an assistant coach and has enjoyed considerable success at his alma mater as a member of the coaching staff.

After working one year with the squad's wide receivers, McManus switched to quarterback coach in 1988, where he has tutored Mike Elkins, a 2nd-round pick by the Kansas City Chiefs in that year's NFL draft, and 1989 ACC total offense leader Phil Barnhill. Last season, McManus helped Keith West throw for nearly 2,000 yards in his first season as the Deacs' starting signal-caller.

As a parttime starter during both of his seasons as a Deacon in 1975 and 1976 under coach Chuck Mills, McManus threw for more than 1,000 yards and 10 TDs during his career. One of his top performances came when he earned ACC Back of the Week honors by throwing for two TDs and scoring one himself in a '75 upset over nationally ranked N.C. State.

The association between McManus and Coach Bill Dooley began when the former Deac accepted a position as a graduate assistant at Virginia Tech the following year. He was with the Hokies in 1978, 1979, and 1981, and also gained coaching experience as an assistant at the U.S. Merchant Marine Academy (in 1980) and at Pittsburgh (1982).

The 37-year-old McManus was a defensive backfield coach at Tulane in 1983 and 1984, then moved on to the University of Connecticut, holding similar responsibilities there for two seasons prior to his return to Wake Forest four years ago.

The coach and his wife Robin have three children—older daughter Kelly, 8; son Ryan, 5; and daughter Katie, 2.

Running Backs

Sandy Kinney

No one is more familiar with the coaching style of Wake Forest's Bill Dooley than his longtime associate Sandy Kinney, a member of every Dooley staff for the past 25 years. Kinney will again this season work with the Demon Deacon running backs, as well as have some important kicking game responsibilities.

Since coming to Wake Forest in 1987, Kinney has played a key role in both capacities. He coached 1987 All-ACC performer Mark Young, the only WFU running back to achieve that honor in the 1980s, and Anthony Williams, a 2nd-team all-league pick in 1990 and the school's 5th-leading all-time rusher.

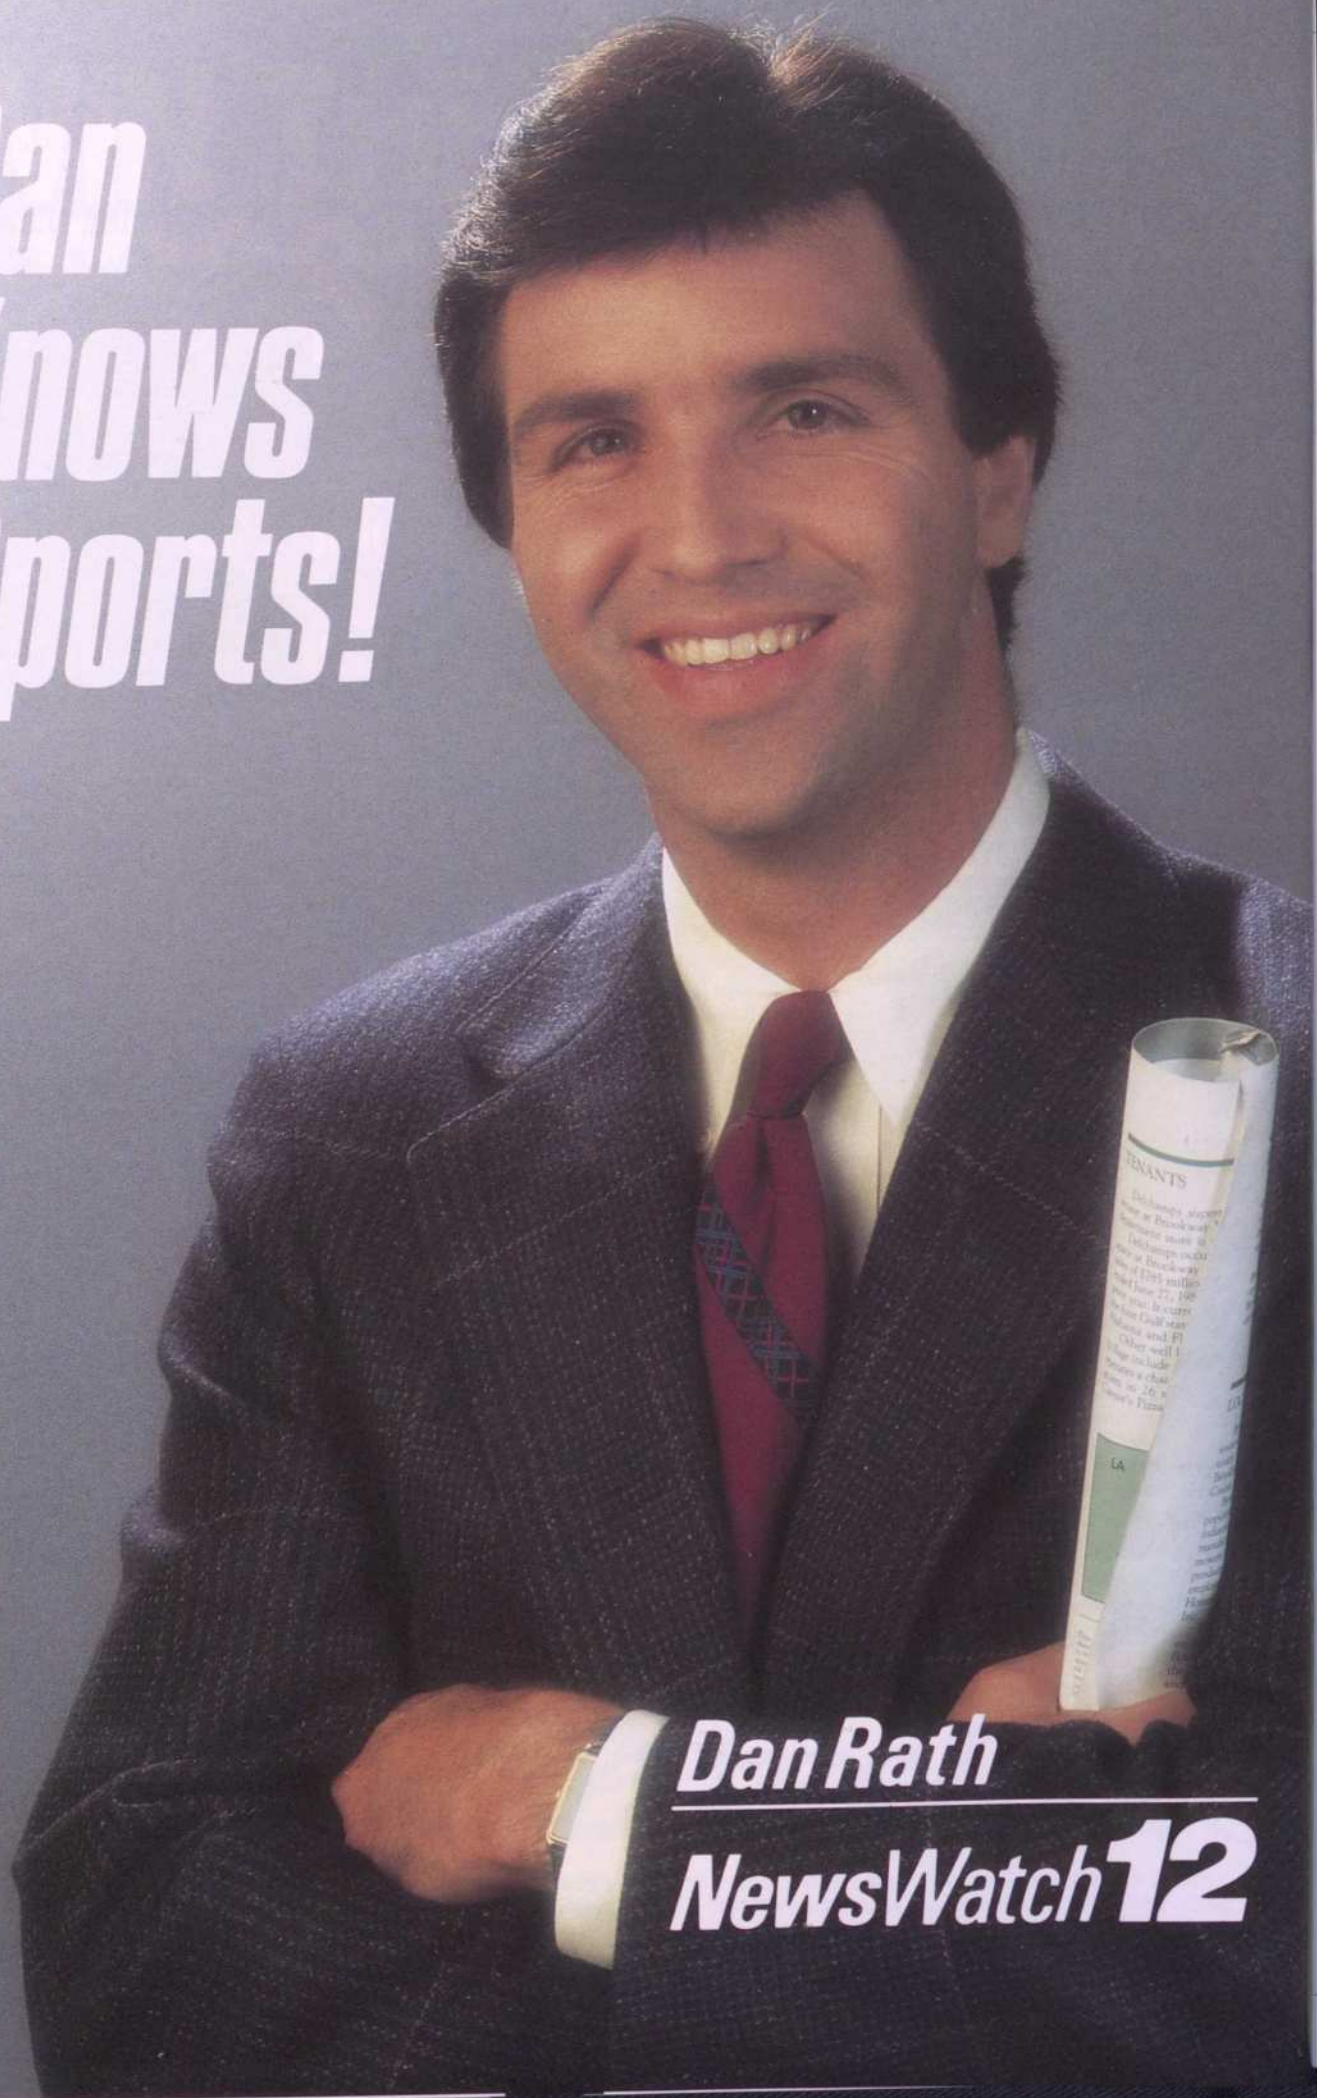

As a special teams coach, Kinney has tutored placekicker Wilson Hoyle, Wake's all-time leading scorer; Dave Behrmann, the ACC's most accurate kicker in 1990; and Mike Green, who entered the Wake recordbook with five field goals versus Maryland last fall.

The Hendersonville (N.C.) native is a former quarterback at North Carolina, where he helped the Tar Heels to the 1963 Gator Bowl. His association with Dooley began at UNC as a graduate assistant in 1967, then as a fulltime staff member the following year.

While with the Tar Heels, Kinney took part in three ACC championships and six bowl games. He added three more postseason trips to his record while at Virginia Tech, giving him an impressive total of 10 bowl appearances as a player and coach.

Kinney, who played professionally with the Charlotte Vikings, and his wife Sondra Peabody of Raleigh have three children—George, a redshirt freshman wingback at Wake Forest; Bruce, 17, a quarterback at Mount Tabor High School; and Lacey Jane, 14, who stays active with cheerleading and softball.

ASSISTANT COACHES

Tight Ends

Skip Stress

This fall marks the fourth season at Wake Forest for coach Skip Stress, who joined the program in 1989 after spending most of the 1980s as a coach on the professional level. Stress will again this year be handling the Deacon tight ends, as well as having some special teams responsibilities.

Highlighting the past two seasons for Stress at Wake Forest, of course, has been the selection of his tight end John Henry Mills to the All-ACC team. This year Mills could become only the second player in school history to achieve all-league status (1st team) three times.

Additionally, Stress is involved with the Deacon kicking game. His experience in that area takes on increased importance this year with the loss of Kim Sheek, the squad's top punter the past three years, and Anthony Williams, one of the ACC's top kickoff return specialists the past two seasons. Finding replacements for both will be a vital task.

A 1976 graduate of the University of California at Berkeley, Stress has an extensive background as an offensive assistant coach. He began his career at California, serving first as a graduate assistant, then as a fulltime staff member there from 1978 through 1981. He left his alma mater to become the offensive coordinator at nearby San Francisco State in 1982 before entering the professional ranks one year later.

The Deacon coach served as an offensive assistant with both the Oakland Invaders and Arizona Outlaws of the United States Football League. Prior to joining Wake Forest, he also was a member of the coaching staff of the Detroit Drive in the Arena Football League.

Stress and his wife Hope are both natives of California.

Defensive Ends

James Webster

James Webster, a prominent figure in Winston-Salem athletics throughout his career, is now in his fifth year at Wake Forest, once again working with the Demon Deacon defensive ends in 1992.

During the Deacon assistant's first four years at Wake, he has helped to produce three professional signees, including David Braxton, a 1988 2nd-round draft pick by the Minnesota Vikings (Braxton is now with Phoenix). He has helped develop current players Maurice Miller and Mike McCrary to a similar level where they now rate among the tops at their position in the ACC.

Webster is uniquely familiar with Winston-Salem, the ACC and Coach Bill Dooley. A graduate of Parkland High in Winston-Salem, he is a member, along with his father James, Sr., of the Winston-Salem/Forsyth County Hall of Fame and starred as a linebacker at North Carolina on Dooley-coached teams in 1969, 1970 and 1971. Two of those clubs took part in bowl games (1970 Peach, 1971 Gator), and Webster was named the outstanding defensive player in that '71 postseason affair.

Webster's honors also include the ACC's Brian Piccolo Award, which he received after overcoming a broken neck to become a defensive leader on that 1971 UNC squad.

A 14-year veteran of college coaching, Webster, 41, served as an assistant at UNC for one year, then held positions at Florida, Kansas, Colorado, and Northwestern, coaching in two bowl games—the 1974 Sugar with Florida, and the 1975 Sun with Kansas.

He and his wife Cornelia have a son, Kali, 14.

Defensive Line

Cliff Yoshida

Cliff Yoshida is in his second stint as a collegiate coach at Wake Forest, having first worked as a Demon Deacon during the 1970s, then returning to Winston-Salem in 1987 with Coach Bill Dooley following a 10-year absence. Once again this fall, Yoshida will be handling the defensive interior line (tackles & noseguard), a major assignment with the graduation of all three starters in the defensive line from last season.

Yoshida worked previously at Wake Forest under Chuck Mills from 1973 until 1977, serving as defensive coordinator for four of those seasons (1973, 75-77). He then went on to Duke for three years, again as defensive coordinator, before joining Dooley's staff for the first time in 1981 at Virginia Tech.

While at Tech, Yoshida played a key role in the construction of Hokie defenses that ranked among the national leaders in both rushing and scoring defense. His most well-known pupil during that time, of course, was Bruce Smith, the 1984 Outland Trophy winner and NFL standout with the Buffalo Bills.

The Covina, CA, native was an All-America guard and linebacker at Cal Poly-Pomona, where he was named Most Valuable Player as a senior in 1963. He served five years with the U.S. Marine Corps, attaining the rank of captain, and also helped coach the Quantico Marine squad in 1969. He entered the college ranks with Mills at Utah State in 1970, then moved on to Wake Forest three years later.

Yoshida has a son, Chris, 19, a sophomore at Wake Forest and a member of the school's outstanding cross country team last fall.

Assistant Athletic Director for Football Operations

Bill Faircloth

An important and popular member of the Wake Forest football staff is Bill Faircloth, who as an assistant athletic director serves in an administrative capacity with the football program, handling a wide range of responsibilities.

Faircloth is in his ninth year in this role after spending five seasons as an assistant coach with the Deacons. Among his duties are on-campus recruiting and the organization of team travel for away contests. He also works closely with each member of the team on academic, housing and personal matters.

As a coach, Faircloth spent 12 seasons on the sidelines at Catawba College (1966 to 1975) and at Duke (1976 and 1977) prior to coming to Wake Forest. His final three years at Catawba, he served as head coach of that program.

A native of Clinton, NC, Faircloth earned three varsity letters as an offensive lineman at WFU. As a senior in 1963, he was the starting right tackle, team captain and earned All-ACC Academic honors. He received his masters degree from Alabama in 1965.

Faircloth and his wife Becky have three sons—Scott and Woody are both recent Wake Forest graduates, while Barry is a current undergraduate student at the school.

SUPPORT STAFF

*Graduate Assistant
Mike Vite*

Now entering his third season at Wake Forest, Mike Vite plays an important role on the Demon Deacon coaching staff in a variety of areas. The past two years, he has served as a volunteer assistant coach. This fall, he will serve as a graduate assistant.

Vite's primary responsibilities, though, do not change. He will once again work with the Deacon defensive backfield, while also handling the punt return unit. During the past two seasons, Wake Forest has rated among the national leaders in punt returns, ranking 6th in the country in 1990 and 17th a year ago.

A native of Elkhart, IN, Vite lettered three years as a running back at Hillsdale College (MI) before graduating in 1981. After serving on the coaching staff at his alma mater one year, he worked one season at Michigan State, then was a defensive assistant at Illinois State from 1983-87.

Vite then spent two years at East Tennessee State before he and his wife Sandy became part of the Wake Forest football family in 1990.

*Graduate Assistant
Dale Earnhardt*

Another new member to the Wake Forest coaching staff this season is Dale Earnhardt, who will serve as a graduate assistant.

Earnhardt, who is no relation to the five-time Winston Cup champion race driver by the same name, was a non-scholarship player for two years at Wake Forest. As a reserve quarterback, he failed to see any game action, but did take part in the annual spring game prior to the 1990 season.

A member of the ACC Academic Honor, he has continued to assist the football program the past two years as a videotape assistant. This season he will be even more involved as he helps prepare the coaching staff for upcoming opponents by providing scouting reports as well as performing other assigned duties.

Earnhardt and his wife Teko were married this past summer.

*Strength Coach
Joey Bullock*

During their careers at Wake Forest, one of the individuals that Deacon players come to know and respect a great deal is Joey Bullock, who directs the athletic department's weight-training and conditioning program.

A 1981 Wake Forest graduate, Bullock has served in his present position since the summer of 1984. Under his supervision, the weight-training program has grown considerably, expanding its facility to more than twice its original size and installing the most up-to-date equipment available. During the past year, Wake Forest obtained 12 new pieces of "Hammer Strength" machines and plans to add to that total within the upcoming year.

Bullock has written numerous articles on weight-training for national publications and been a guest lecturer at various seminars throughout the country. He also served as an administrative aide for a Christian-outreach basketball team's visit to Brazil in 1991.

Bullock and his wife Debbie have two daughters—Hannah, 7, and Hillary, 5.

Office Staff

Three very important members of the Wake Forest Football family are Mary Parsons, the administrative assistant to head coach Bill Dooley; Pat Alwine, who works primarily in the area of recruiting; and Joy Carr, secretary to the assistant coaching staff.

Mary has been at Wake Forest for 25 years. Alwine is in her sixth season with the football program, while Carr joined the staff four years ago.

The Colorful Deacon Tradition

Like many other collegiate school colors and mascots, Wake Forest's traditional "Old Gold & Black" and "Demon Deacon" have distinctive, yet somewhat debated, origins.

As early as 1895, Wake Forest College was using its colors in athletic competition. The school's literary magazine, "The Wake Forest Student," described them in this manner:

"At last, Wake Forest has a college badge. It is a very neat button designed by Mr. John M. Heck and contains a tiger's head over the letters WFC. The colors are in old gold and black."

As the 20th century opened, those colors became frequently associated with the college, particularly its athletic and debate teams. Most historians believe that their adoption comes from the connection with the tiger mascot, and not, as some have proposed, from any association with the Bible.

Sadly, Heck, who is credited by the magazine with the creation of the tiger/old gold and black badge, died of typhoid fever at the age of 19 — just one year after making a contribution to Wake Forest history that has lasted now for nearly 100 years.

The tiger mascot, however, remained with the school for just more than two decades. Reports indicate that by the early 1920s, the college's nicknames were most commonly noted as the "Baptists," or simply "The Old Gold & Black."

Those were difficult times for the Wake Forest athletic squads. But a gentleman by the name of Hank Garrity took over as head football and basketball coach in 1923 and for a brief period reversed those fortunes. Garrity led the football team, which had never had a winning record in the 1900s, to three straight winning seasons. And in two seasons on the hardwood, his clubs compiled a 33-14 mark.

The current nicknames of the time were not descriptive enough of this newfound athletic spirit, school newspaper editor Mayon Parker ('24) felt. After Wake Forest defeated rival Trinity (now Duke) in Garrity's first football season (1923), Parker first referred to the team as "Demon Deacons," in recognition of what he termed their "devilish" play and fighting spirit.

Wake Forest's news director Henry Belk and Garrity liked the title and began using it extensively. The name has, of course, remained as one of the most unique in America.

With the "Demon Deacon" terminology, though has come the actual mascot himself (or herself, which has been the case on a couple of occasions). Jack Baldwin ('43) was the original student Deacon mascot, the first of a long line of entertainers to lead the school's teams into action.

"Some of my fraternity brothers and I were just sitting around one evening," Baldwin recalls, "and came to the agreement that what Wake Forest needed was someone dressed like a deacon — top hat, tails, a black umbrella and all that. We wanted him to be more dignified than other mascots, sort of like an old Baptist Deacon would dress."

The fraternity president asked Baldwin, who was known for his sense of humor, if he would be willing to don such an outfit, and he agreed. An old tuxedo was found. So was a worn top hat, and the following Saturday, there was Baldwin leading the Wake Forest football team onto the field, riding the North Carolina ram.

The stunt, that began as a late-night joke, had become tradition.

By the time Baldwin graduated two years later, a number of interested students were willing to keep the Deacon alive. At first, that responsibility remained with his fraternity, but later broadened to include the entire student body. Today, special try-outs are held annually to fill the Deacon's shoes, and the competition is intense.

Over the years, the Deacon has performed numerous memorable stunts, some of which school officials probably would just as soon forget.

Jimmy Devos ('55) shocked a Bowman Gray Stadium football crowd one afternoon by dropping his pants — only to reveal a pair of colorful Bermuda shorts. Ray Whitley ('57), introduced the art of goal-climbing to Wake Forest contests. Bill Shepherd ('60) answered Auburn's war eagle cry with his own "turkey buzzard," and Hap Bulger ('65) gained notoriety as the stately "Debonair Deacon."

Perhaps the most well-known Deacon was Jeff Dobbs ('77), a spirited and acrobatic dancer, who even now returns frequently to inspire Wake Forest crowds with his cheering and antics.

In more recent years, the Deacon has become more of an entertainer than cheerleader. He steps prominently throughout the crowd and playing field/court at all home contests and is the favorite of children and adults alike. One very popular Deacon of the 80s, Chris Kibler ('84) even managed to sing the National Anthem from inside his oversized head and costume.

The current Deacon has even drawn praise from national media, such as NBC's Bob Costas, who has said, "I love the Deacon. He's the mascot of protocol. I've never known him to be rude. He represents the gentility of the Old South, a very dapper guy."

"I think one day a year all Wake Forest men should dress as the Demon Deacon and walk — no, promenade — that way to class."

Have a Great Season, Demon Deacons!

HISTORY

The Wake Forest Hall of Fame

Visitors to Wake Forest's William Neal Reynolds Gymnasium can view a special section of the university's expansive trophy display that is devoted to 51 of Wake's greatest athletic achievers.

Those 51 individuals represent Wake Forest University's Sports Hall of Fame, established in 1970 with the induction of four former Deacon greats. The first group consisted of former basketball coach Murray Greason, the late football star Brian Piccolo, former football coach Peahead Walker and former director of athletics Jim Weaver, who later became the first commissioner of the Atlantic Coast Conference.

Eligibility for Hall of Fame members is defined by 10 criteria. The inductee (male or female) must:

1. Be out of school at least 10 years, or be deceased;
2. Have had a nationally recognized athletic, coaching or administrative ability;
3. Be of good character and reputation, and not have been a source of embarrassment in any way to the university;
4. Have had athletic achievement, as a student at the university or as an alumnus, that brought considerable fame to the university as well as him/her self;
5. Have attended the university at least two years or have been a member of the athletic staff at least five years;

6. Have left the school, as a graduate or not, in good standing and with the good graces of university officials;

7. If achievements have been based on a professional career, have played at least five years professionally;

8. Be inducted with no more than three others but with no minimum restrictions;

9. Not have a stronger or prior claim with another university, and;

10. Not receive more than one dissenting vote from members of the Hall of Fame Committee.

The Hall of Fame Committee, which meets annually to determine worthy candidates for that year's induction, consists of seven members. Director of Athletics Dr. Gene Hooks is joined on that board by Bill Hensley of Charlotte, Dr. L.H. Hollingsworth of Winston-Salem, Dr. Hunter Moricle of Reidsville, former faculty athletic representative Dr. Jack Sawyer, Frank Wyatt of High Point, and Smith Young of Lexington.

Anyone can nominate a person to the Hall of Fame. Dr. Hooks calls an annual meeting of the committee each year. After a summary of each nominee is prepared by the university's sports information and alumni offices and reviewed by the committee, the committee selects its choices and Dr. Hooks sets the time and place of the induction ceremony.

Seventeen former Wake Forest football players are among the Hall of Famers, including NFL greats Billy Barnes and Norm Snead.

The most recent Hall of Fame induction ceremony took place last February at halftime of the Wake Forest-Duke basketball game in Lawrence Joel Coliseum. Former football star Jim Clack led a group of four inductees. The other three members were golf pro Scott Hoch, former baseball player and coach Jack Stallings, and two-sport standout Herb Cline.

Following is a list of Wake Forest's Hall of Fame, by year and sport:

WHERE ARE THEY NOW?

Plemmons Making The Grade

By Dan Zacharias

As the ace of Wake Forest's pitching staff from 1959-61, Bob Plemmons made a habit out of blazing fastballs by opposing hitters.

These days he remains part of the Wake Forest community. But instead of trotting out to the mound every fourth day to face an unfriendly foe, he calmly strides to a podium, where he addresses a classroom full of students in his position as Z. Smith Reynolds Professor of Mathematics and Computer Science.

He joins Dr. Richard Carmichael, who played for the men's basketball team in the early-1960's, as former Wake athletes who are now faculty members in the math department. Plemmons feels that experience gives him an advantage over some of his peers because he knows first-hand what a student-athlete goes through trying to balance time on and off the field.

"I'm able to relate to the athletes I have in my class, but they understand just because they're an athlete doesn't mean they get special privileges," begins Plemmons. "They're just like any other student, but I try and give them some advice on how they can budget their time."

"I try and tell them to come up with a study plan, and even though some feel they're at a disadvantage because of all the time they spend practicing and playing, I try to convince them that they're not," he continues. "They have just as much study time as other students, who end up going home for the weekend or who get involved in other activities on campus. Their main purpose at Wake Forest is to get an education, that's the first priority, but they can still excel in athletics."

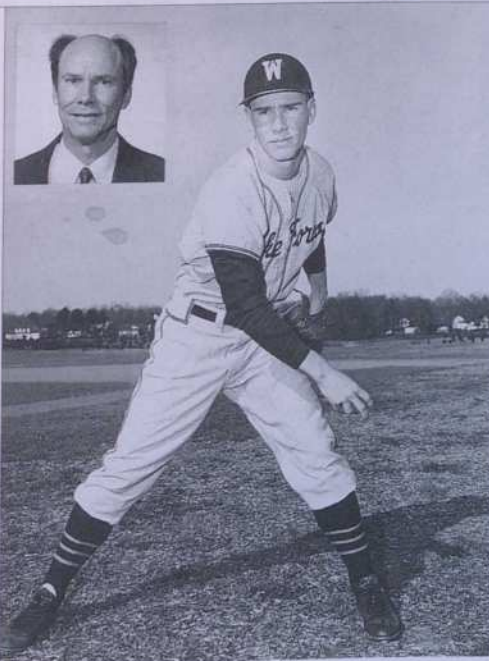

If anyone doubts that philosophy, all they have to do is look at the record Plemmons compiled during his days in Winston-Salem for proof.

He was the workhorse for Wake Forest during his three varsity seasons, pitching in excess of 80 innings each year. In 1959, the Deacon pitching staff hurled six complete games — all by Plemmons — and finished with a 13-8 record. Plemmons accounted for more than half of those wins with a 7-3 mark, but that was only the start.

Plemmons had seven of the team's nine complete games a year later, winning six of the team's 14 games, and culminated his career with an 8-2 record as the Deacons finished 23-7. He left Wake as the all-time leader in strikeouts (230), innings pitched (256-2/3), wins (21) and earned run average (2.49).

All of these records, except the ERA mark, stood for more than 25 years before being broken by players who were in their fourth year of eligibility.

What makes his achievement even more impressive is that while Plemmons was doing all of those things on the field, he was also in the process of becoming the first athlete in school history to make the Bob Plemmons was the ace of Demon Deacon pitching staff from 1959-61 and today he's fulfilling a similar role as a Reynolds professor in the Wake Forest math department.

Atlantic Coast Conference Academic Honor Roll all three years as a varsity athlete. In addition, he won the ACC's award for excellence in scholarship and athletics in 1961.

During his senior year, one of the people who influenced Plemmons to pursue graduate school was the head of the math department, Ivey Gentry.

"I knew Bob real well and remember he was one of our outstanding undergraduate students," says Gentry, who currently is retired but remains associated with the university as an assistant in the academic counseling department. "Since then, he has become a real credit in the field of mathematics and I'm really pleased he's back on campus."

Plemmons gained a fellowship at Auburn, but before completing work on his doctorate degree, he toiled for four seasons in the Baltimore Orioles minor league system.

His first stop on the minor league trail was the Northwest League in 1961 when he played for Tri-Cities in Washington state. After that he spent one year at Aberdeen in the Northern League, one year at Elmira in the Eastern League and half a season with Rochester of the International League before calling it a career.

Each of his managers went on to become recognized names in the major leagues. Billy Demars (Tri-Cities) is currently the third base coach for the Philadelphia Phillies; Cal Ripken, Sr. (Aberdeen) coached third base for the Orioles (Cal, Jr. was the batboy); Earl Weaver (Elmira) managed Baltimore for 17 seasons; and Clyde King (Rochester) headed the Yankees in 1982.

"When I decided to quit, I went back to school, finished my Ph.D., and graduated in 1965," says Plemmons. "I was fortunate because Auburn was on the quarter system, so that allowed me to take classes two quarters a year before going to play baseball."

He also got married during that time to wife Mary Jo, and is currently a volunteer in Winston-Salem who heads up a project which teaches English to people from foreign countries who wish to learn it as a second language. They have two children, Theresa (29) and Greg (24), who both earned degrees from North Carolina.

After graduating from Auburn, Plemmons served on the faculty at Mississippi from 1966-67 and then accepted a position at the University of Tennessee. During his tenure there, he was named head of the Computer Science Department in 1974 and remained in that position until 1981 when he moved to N.C. State.

While in Raleigh, he served as professor of computer science and mathematics before founding the UNC Center for Research in Scientific Computation in 1988. He served as the center's director until 1990 when he was contacted about becoming a Reynolds professor at Wake.

"I decided to take the job and I've enjoyed it a great deal," says Plemmons. "First, I enjoy the research and working on grand challenge type problems. I like the thought of coming up with new results because it becomes very useful in other projects," he says. "Second, I enjoy working with the students. I've had 18 Ph.D. students, including two who finished in August, but the undergraduates are a joy to work with as well."

"I enjoy being in the position of a role model for current athletes because I feel I have been fairly successful and I may be living proof that a Wake Forest education will take you a long ways in life," adds Plemmons.

Currently, he is involved with three research projects in addition to his teaching responsibilities. Last summer he received a grant from the National Science Foundation for a project which involves image processing algorithms. One of the people assisting him on this project is freshman quarterback Rusty LaRue.

Plemmons is also working with the radiology department at Bowman Gray School of Medicine on developing high-speed computer algorithms, which would de-blur x-ray or MRI images. The project, which is sponsored by the Air Force Office of Scientific Research, attempts to clear up fuzzy images and allow doctors to see the entire x-ray clearly.

The hours he keeps are sometimes long, and sometimes frustrating, but the end result generally makes all of that time worthwhile. And even though the applause he receives from his peers may not be as immediate as when he was striking out one hitter after another, it's just as loud.

Deacon Dateline

By Julie McClung

Up until recently, most discussion about the Wake Forest cross country program has centered around the Deacon men's harriers, and for good reason: that squad is among Wake's most successful, claiming two Atlantic Coast Conference championships in the past three years as well as a third-place finish at the 1989 NCAA Championships.

This year, however, the Wake Forest women's cross country team is giving the phrase "gender equity" a whole new meaning. No longer in the shadows, the team is nationally-ranked for the first time in two years, has finished no lower than third in any of the meets they have run in this year, and boasts a deeper lineup than the program has seen in years.

What's head coach Francie Goodridge's secret? Dedicated recruiting, a little luck, and a secret weapon we'll just call "The Canadian Connection".

This year's Wake roster features a trio of imports from up north, junior Carrie Powers and freshmen Angela Schwan and Nicole Stevenson. Goodridge says there is a difference in the background of these runners which makes them especially successful — and it's more than just eating their Wheaties.

"Canada has a very strong club system which is a big factor in helping young athletes develop," notes the coach. "They get more consistent development, because their coaches stay with them throughout their entire careers."

That, in fact, is typical of the system Goodridge herself grew up with. The coach, a native of Ann Arbor, MI, was raised just a stone's throw across Lake Erie from this harrier hotbed, a factor which she feels may help her in luring these performers down to the sunny South.

"The club system is the system I grew up with. The coaches know the young athletes all the way through their career, so they're much more familiar with them, with their styles, etc.," Goodridge notes.

"When I recruit up there, it's very different from recruiting United States athletes. Sometimes the club coaches feel that in the American programs, the athletes get burned out, running three seasons.

"At Wake Forest, we don't take that approach, and that makes it easier to get some of the top Canadian runners here. We take a close look at our schedule before the season begins and juggle our lineup to have everyone at the top of their form come championship-time. That means incorporating some down-time into everyone's schedule. Our system is a system they're familiar with. They have trained for peak seasons as we do here at Wake Forest, so they fit right in," concludes the coach.

Stevenson, the 1991 Canadian National Junior Cross Country champion, substantiates Goodridge's theories.

"Knowing the schedule here was one that included more breaks made this running program very attractive to me. Here, the athlete gets to put in a response as to how she's feeling, how her training is going. It makes a tremendous difference in preventing burn-out."

Goodridge says Canadian athletes harbor another goal which makes Wake Forest's rotational training system even more attractive: the prospect of competing for their country.

"Canadian club coaches and athletes always stress having the opportunity to compete for Canada. There's a lot of enthusiasm for the sport, and the country has a small population, relatively speaking, so there are a lot of opportunities for college-level athletes who do well to return to Canada and be spectacular."

As a member of the Canadian National Cross Country team, Stevenson has already had the opportunity to race for Canada. For now, however, Stevenson has traded in the red-and-white of Canada's banner for the Deacon Old Gold and Black, and she's excelling in her new home.

The 19-year-old has led the Deacs through every race she's competed in this year, running with — and breezing by — some of the nation's finest collegiate harriers. Her coach couldn't possibly be more excited about Stevenson's success.

"I've been just delighted with her progress here so far," says Goodridge. "I thought that she had a lot of untapped ability, and she and her coaches really felt that she was ready to make a big splash this season."

"Nicole had a stress fracture which she recovered from most of this summer. Because of that, we didn't really know how highly she was going to be able to start out during cross country season here. Little did we know, she'd be able to start right at the top," Goodridge notes with a chuckle.

"We expect her to prove herself as one of the top freshmen in the nation, and look for her to do very well going into championship competition. She clearly has a shot at the ACC Championship, and at All-America honors. I feel she'll be one of our very best runners in the conference and in the nation."

IN TODAY'S COLUMN

- The Wake women's cross country team gets a boost from The Canadian Connection
- One Demon Deacon gets a win...in more ways than one.

One week from today, Stevenson will lead the Deacon women into what may be their biggest test so far this season, the Atlantic Coast Conference Championships. To say that the league meet has been dominated by N.C. State — they've won 11 out of a possible 14 conference titles to date — would be a major understatement.

This year, however, the Deacon faithful might just see some new faces in the winner's circle.

After playing very well in two extremely tough contests with nationally-ranked opponents but coming out on the short end of the stick, the Deacon football team took the opportunity to show off their new and improved game in Nashville two weekends ago. The result was a nearly flawless 40-6 win for Wake Forest over the hosting Vanderbilt Commodores.

Analysts can point out a lot of factors which led to the win: George Coghill's spectacular two-touchdown performance, Mike McCrary's two sacks and numerous tackles-for-loss, John Leach's tireless rambling, Keith West's performance against the Commodores' numerous defensive fronts...the list goes on and on. The gurus may have missed one little thing that contributed to the win, however — it seems senior linebacker Ted VanHyfte and former Wake assistant women's basketball coach Valerie Wancket had just become the latest Deacon couple to get engaged.

The crowd at the football game that day totalled nearly 34,000 people, including a few dozen assorted VanHyfte - Wancket relatives who travelled hours from the couple's hometown in Illinois to see a good game and learned of the much-anticipated engagement only hours earlier. Even after hearing the good news, the families got more than they bargained for, as VanHyfte went on to tally a career-high eight tackles against Vandy and played an integral role on a defense which limited the Commodores to just 312 yards — only 68 in the air — and a measly six points.

"Our families were just ecstatic about the game," comments Wancket, currently an associate with the marketing department at Planters/LifeSavers. "They couldn't get over how good our team was. All the way around, I couldn't have asked for a better weekend."

"I was winner on both sides of life, on the field and off," VanHyfte adds. "She said yes, and we won the game — you can't ask for much more than that."

Wake's Nicole Stevenson was recently named the Atlantic Coast Conference's Runner-of-the-Week, becoming the first Deac to earn that acclaim.

UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY

The United States Military Academy was founded on March 16, 1802 by an Act of Congress. Its purpose has been, and continues to be, to provide the nation with leaders of character who serve the common defense.

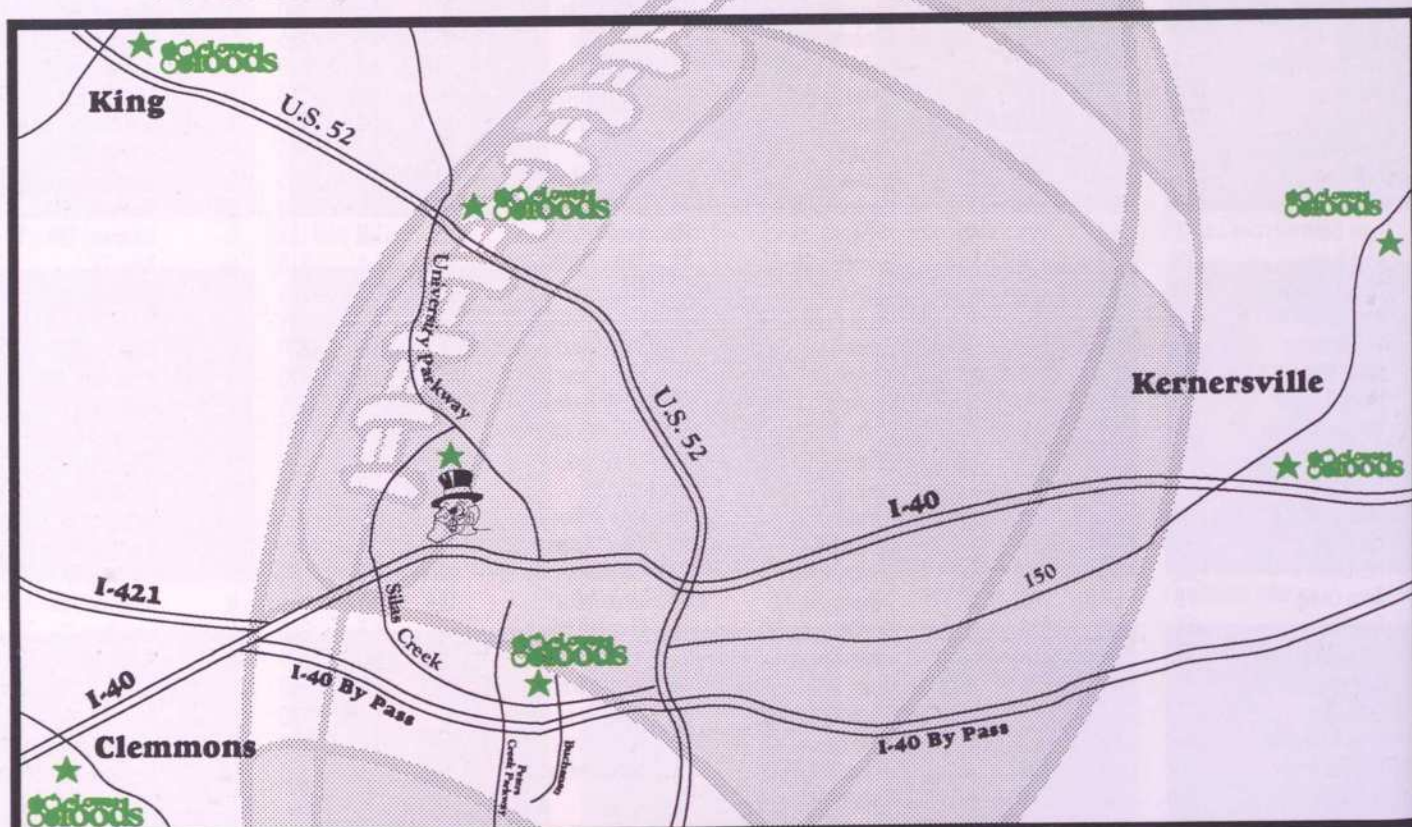

The academy has occupied a colorful and important place in American history since its founding 190 years ago. Among its more than 49,000 graduates, it lists names such as Dwight D. Eisenhower, Douglas MacArthur, H. Norman Schwarzkopf, John J. Pershing, Ulysses S. Grant, Robert E. Lee, and astronauts Frank Borman, Mike Collins and Edwin Aldrin. Each year the Academy graduates about 900 new officers, a long way from the graduating class of 1802 which numbered two men.

The Military Academy offers a four-year course of study culminating in the award of a Bachelor of Science degree and a commission as a second lieutenant in the Regular Army.

The centerpiece of the academic program remains the broad core curriculum which is almost equally divided between the arts and sciences. In addition, the Academy also provides the opportunity to pursue an area of special interest through concentration in more than 30 fields of study or election of an optional majors program in one of 19 areas. Both of these programs offer studies in the areas of the Basic Sciences, the Applied Sciences and Engineering, the Humanities, Management, and National Security and Public Affairs.

Heritage And Promise Living Up To It's Name

By Kerry M. King

Freshman Douglas Scott Love, son of a Methodist minister from outside Charlotte, NC, is glad that Wake Forest's most ambitious capital campaign ever is rolling along ahead of schedule.

Love is the first recipient of the Douglas Cannon Scholarship, one of many scholarships already created through the $150 million Heritage and Promise campaign.

Less than a year and a half after the campaign officially began in April 1991, alumni, friends, parents, corporations and foundations across the country have pledged $119 million.

The most visible impact of the campaign to date is the Reynolda Campus building program. The new Benson University Center, the Worrell Professional Center for Law and Management, the Edwin G. Wilson wing of the Z. Smith Reynolds Library, and extensive renovations to several existing buildings have all been made possible in part by campaign gifts. The campus stadium behind Reynolds Gymnasium is also included in the campaign.

But construction accounts for only a fifth of the campaign goal. The top priorities of the five-year fundraising effort are more student financial aid and increased faculty support.

Some $39 million is sought for faculty support so that Wake Forest can attract, retain and reward the best professors available. Another $37 million will be dedicated to scholarships, loans and other forms of financial aid for students. The campaign also targets $26 million in unrestricted gifts, $13 million for endowed programs and $13 million for restricted operating costs.

The campaign is about $14 million and six months ahead of schedule, but numbers aren't what's important about this effort, said G. William Joyner, Jr. ('66), vice president of University Relations.

"This campaign is not about some multi-million goal," Joyner said, "but young people like Scott Love who can come to Wake Forest because someone who believes in Wake Forest has funded a scholarship."

"It's rewarding to see the results of the campaign as scholarships such as this one are awarded and professorships are created. The impact of the campaign is being felt in many ways on campus, but the biggest impact still lies ahead."

One new scholarship that will certainly have an impact on Wake Forest athletics in the future is the athletic-academic excellence fund, designed to reward student-athletes for their academic and leadership skills as well as their athletic talent.

"That scholarship is almost like a double merit scholarship," said Robert D. Mills ('71, MBA '80), assistant vice president and director of the Heritage and Promise campaign. "It will be awarded to freshman student-athletes with outstanding academic records or demonstrated talents in leadership, the arts, community service or other areas. These will be young people Wake Forest would normally try to attract through its merit scholarships if they were not receiving an athletic grant."

A major commitment to this fund was announced earlier this month by the family of Smith Young ('39), of Lexington, NC, a life trustee and long-time Deacon Club leader. Young's wife, Helen, and children, Jay ('70) and Jeff ('72), have made a long-term commitment of $1 million to establish the J. Smith Young Athletic-Academic Excellence Fund.

Smith Young, president and chief executive officer of Lexington Furniture Industries, played basketball at Wake Forest on the 1939 team that participated in the first NCAA Tournament.

"Smith has been a major force in supporting our athletic program and giving young athletes the opportunity to receive a quality education provided by our great university," said D. Wayne Calloway ('59), chairman of the board of trustees. Calloway is also a tri-chairman of the Heritage and Promise campaign with golfer Arnold Palmer ('51) and Wachovia CEO John Medlin.

The Cannon Scholarship and the Athletic-Academic Excellence Fund are only two of many scholarships that have been created or whose endowment has been increased through the campaign.

That's important for the 65 percent of Wake Forest's students who receive some form of financial aid. One of the top goals of the campaign is to ensure that Wake Forest can meet the financial needs of its students.

Since its founding in 1834, Wake Forest has maintained a need-blind admissions policy — students are admitted based on academic ability, not their ability to pay. The university promises accepted students that it will provide enough financial assistance to attend for those who need it.

Scott Love (left) is able to attend Wake Forest thanks to the help of donors like J.C. and Laura Cannon, who created his scholarship through the Heritage and Promise Campaign.

One of the newest holders of an endowed Wake Forest distinguished professorship is long-time psychology department chairman John Williams (right), who will continue his work with graduate students like Debbie Formy-Duval.

Wake Forest students will receive more than $15 million in financial aid — scholarships, loans and work study — this year, more than double the $7 million 10 years ago.

"A large proportion of our students would not be here without scholarships," said Thomas Mullen, dean of the college. "The character of the student body would change. We would be in danger of losing students from our traditional constituency and from some of our alumni families."

That's certainly true in Scott Love's case.

"I am at Wake Forest because of the Cannon Scholarship," Love states. "With my father being a minister, there is not a lot of extra money available for college for me and my two sisters."

"If I had not received financial assistance, I would have had to go to a state-supported school," Love said.

"But I didn't want to have to lower my expectations. I didn't want to have to go to a school where I wouldn't feel as comfortable as I do with Wake Forest. You can become the person you really want to be because of all the opportunities and the demand for academic excellence here."

Love had the opportunity last month to thank the donors of the Cannon Scholarship, J.C. and Laura Cannon of Catawba, SC, for their generosity. The Cannons established the scholarship in memory of their son Douglas, a 1967 graduate of Wake Forest who died in 1989.

A graduate of the prestigious North Carolina School of Science and Mathematics, Love wants to become a family doctor in a rural area.

"I want to practice somewhere where I know the people and can be part of the community," he said.

"There is a real need for doctors in rural areas. A lot of physicians are not going into general practice now."

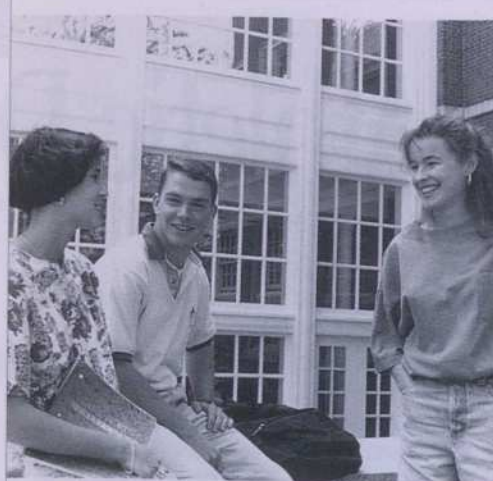

"I want to help people. A lot of rural people have a need for medicine and it's just not there for many of them."

Love's commitment to service and ethical standards mirrors Wake Forest's mission and motto, Pro Humanitate.

"We want our students to be known not only for what they know, but for what they believe in and what they are committed to," said President Thomas K. Hearn, Jr.

One of the largest and most recent gifts to the campaign will help the University continue to fulfill its mission.

Trustee and Wake Forest parent J. Tylee Wilson, of Jacksonville, FL, a former chairman of RJR Nabisco, announced earlier this month that he will commit $1.9 million to establish a chair in business ethics in the department of communication. Wilson's son, Chris, is a punter on the Wake Forest football team.

Another top goal of the campaign is student support to keep Wake Forest affordable for students like Tracey Hogan (left), David Jackson and Catherine Coleman.

The gift will allow Wake Forest to hire an experienced teacher/scholar with an established reputation in ethics and established contacts with the business world to relate the teaching of ethics to real life situations. The appointment will span departmental lines to include the teaching of ethics across the University curricula.

"Mr. Wilson's gift recognizes that future leaders come to business from a broad spectrum of college majors," Provost David G. Brown explained. "All students, whether they major in English or finance or sociology or physics, will be greatly advantaged by studying ethics through cases drawn from the world of business. A concern for and understanding of business ethics needs to permeate our society."

The Wilson chair counts toward the campaign's $39 million goal for new chairs and professorships, and funds for visiting professors, sabbaticals, professional travel, research expenses and course development. With large numbers of the faculty reaching retirement age between now and the end of the century, Wake Forest needs higher faculty salaries and support funds to retain and reward existing top professors and to attract top new professors, Brown said.

Thousands of volunteers are taking the message of faculty support and the other goals of the campaign to Wake Foresters across the country. Regional campaigns have been held in 23 areas across the country, including many cities in North Carolina and from New York City to Florida. Regionals are being held in 10 areas this fall and will be held in 17 areas next spring to wrap up the active phase of the campaign.

Joyner is confident the campaign will reach all its goals.

"Because of the leadership of the campaign executive committee and thousands of volunteers across the country, we have an opportunity to place Wake Forest as the premier small private university in the southeast," he said.

"Our new buildings are built and largely paid for. Therefore, we can concentrate on attracting the best faculty and students in the country to build on Wake Forest's proud heritage."

The Ed Wilson Wing of the Z. Smith Reynolds Library was also made possible through the campaign, but construction makes up only one-fifth of the projected goal. As a result of these improvements, students like LaShonda Lawrence, Erin Sullivan and Adam Lamb have more resources to choose from.

THE ADMINISTRATION

Athletic Director Ron Wellman

A new era has just begun at Wake Forest with the announcement that Ron Wellman will be succeeding Dr. Gene Hooks as athletic director.

Hooks, who headed the department for 28 years, announced on May 28, 1992 that he would be resigning in order to become the first director of the NCAA Division I-A Athletic Directors Association (NACDA).

After a four month search process, the man who emerged as the top candidate was Wellman. An experienced coach and administrator, he brings a philosophy which is consistent with Wake Forest's sound approach of athletic integrity and academic excellence.

"I come to Wake Forest with great expectations, but that shouldn't be surprising because Wake Forest has always had great expectations of itself," says Wellman, a 1970 graduate of Bowling Green State University. "This is a tremendous opportunity and we're going to follow the traditions which have been set before us."

Wellman moves to Winston-Salem after spending the past six years as the director of athletics at Illinois State University. While leading that department, he was responsible for improving a number of the school's athletic facilities, in addition to improving ISU's grade point average among student-athletes.

One of his biggest accomplishments was the formation of an annual banquet, which honored those student-athletes who excelled on the field and in the classroom. He worked with officials from GTE to start the "Student-Athlete Excellence Banquet" and it has become a cornerstone in the department's commitment to academics.

"There is a strong tradition of athletic excellence here at Wake Forest, but one of the most attractive aspects of this position is Wake Forest's strong commitment to the academic process," says Wellman, who was officially introduced at a press conference Oct. 13. "The values and ideals of the total program are something that also appealed to me a great deal."

Wellman had a one year stint at Mankato State, a Division II university located in Mankato, MN, before he and his family moved to Illinois State. Wellman and his wife, Linda, have three daughters — Angela, 19; Nicole, 16; and Melissa, 13.

His career as an athletic administrator actually began at Elmhurst College where he was a jack-of-all-trades. He served as head baseball coach from 1972-81, in addition to being an assistant for the football and basketball teams, and being an associate professor of health and physical education. In 1977 he was named athletic director, and held that position until 1981 when he moved on to Northwestern as the school's head baseball coach.

It's somewhat ironic that baseball is the sport Hooks excelled in as well, having been a two-time All-America third baseman during his career as a player at Wake Forest from 1948-50.

Following his graduation in 1950, Hooks earned a masters degree from North Carolina in 1952 and a doctorate in education and physical education from George Peabody in 1957.

He returned to Wake in 1956, instructing in the physical education department until 1959, when he became an associate professor in the department. He taught until his appointment as athletic director in 1964. Hooks also served as head baseball coach from 1957 until 1959, and later assisted with that program.

"It's kind of hard, harder than I thought it would be," said Hooks of his final day on the job. "It's sort of traumatic, but I've always been the type of person who is committed to anticipating the future and not reflecting on the past."

"Ron Wellman is an excellent choice, he's a professional, and will do an outstanding job at Wake Forest," continued Hooks. "I have no reservations at all about him and I'm confident that the Wake Forest people will be happy with him."

One of the things Hooks is most proud of as he leaves his alma mater is the fact that the athletic program is in sound shape. As many as six fall sports were ranked in the nation's Top 25 at one point this year, and Hooks is one of the main reasons behind that success.

Hooks led a massive facility-development program which has had a profound impact on every sport. His lifelong commitment to Wake's athletic program culminated in the new on-campus baseball complex being named in his honor. "Gene Hooks Stadium" is now recognized as one of the best settings for baseball in the country.

The baseball stadium, however, was only part of the renovation. Athletes now have first-class facilities like the Leighton Tennis Stadium, the Haddock Golf Center, and Campus Stadium to practice and play their games.

All of these facilities were made possible through an $11 million fund-raising campaign and also included a portion of the funding for the Lawrence Joel Veterans Memorial Coliseum.

Beyond capital improvements, however, Hooks was also known for his daily budgetary skills and management in directing a multi-million dollar department.

He was a leader in special attractions and innovative promotions, but never sacrificed smart, sound financial management in doing so. During his administration, the department developed a very accurate cost-accounting system, which led to the department's revenue increasing more than 10-fold. All of this while its expenditures increased just over six times.

Even though he will no longer be an official part of the Wake Forest family, Gene Hooks will always be — in the truest sense — a Wake Forester.

Hooks' wife of more than 30 years, the former Jean Knott of Kinston, NC, will remain on campus, continuing in her role as Director of Computer Services and Administration in the School of Law. The couple has three sons and two grandchildren.

President Thomas K. Hearn

by Brian Eckert
WFU News Bureau

When Thomas K. Hearn Jr. came to Wake Forest University as its 12th president in 1983, two hurdles loomed before the campus: an acute shortage of space, and a challenge to the independence of the trustees.

Academic departments were outgrowing their facilities. More classrooms, more labs, more offices had to be found. The million-volume Z. Smith Reynolds Library faced the day when it could not house the new books and information technology that professors and students need. Overcrowding undermined the growing stature of the School of Law and Babcock Graduate School of Management.

Meanwhile, Wake Forest and the Baptist State Convention of North Carolina pondered the independence of the university's trustees. Proud of its Baptist heritage but wary of the growing controversy within the denomination, the university sought to protect academic freedom.

Hearn's leadership, planning and persistence enabled Wake Forest to leap both obstacles. Alumni, friends and corporate support made a $65 million building program a reality. Bowman Gray School of Medicine expanded dramatically...Negotiation and conciliation produced a new voluntary and fraternal relationship with the Baptist State Convention. Throughout the period, Wake Forest topped U. S. News and World Report's annual college rankings and admissions applications soared.

While guiding Wake Forest through campus challenges, Hearn has turned the university's resources outward to the city and state. When Winston-Salem lost jobs after several major corporations retrenched, moved or merged, Hearn joined a number of civic groups to address the problem.

He founded Leadership Winston-Salem, chaired the board of Winston-Salem Business, Inc., and today is chairman of the Piedmont Triad Development Corp. The latter group of CEOs from greater Winston-Salem, Greensboro and High Point deals regionally with economic development issues. The goal is to plan and recruit diverse new business for the entire area.

Hearn's example of public service and leadership is followed by administrators, faculty and students, who have become involved in community service in record numbers and a variety of ways.

"Our campus must be a place where students are brought to understand the issues of public life and to regard public service as the responsibility of all citizens," he says.

Students responded last year by building a Habitat for Humanity house, and volunteering their time through the campus Volunteer Service Corps.

"Integrity, leadership and public service are central to the heritage of Wake Forest, and what it stands for. We intend to strengthen those key themes even further in the years ahead," he explains.

Nationally, Hearn leads the movement to reform college athletics, serving on the NCAA Presidents Commission and the Knight Foundation Commission on Intercollegiate Athletics. He chairs the presidents' strategic planning committee.

"Athletics are a very important part of society," he says. "Young people who seek to develop athletic skills have self-discipline and commitment to excellence. This is a contribution to university life, provided the university's program honestly looks out for the welfare of the student athlete."

Hearn believes that reform has begun to make substantial changes, but that the full effect will take time. For example, certification of NCAA member schools' athletic programs will soon be required. Hearn and Dr. Gene Hooks, Wake Forest athletic director, serve on the committees designing the certification process, which will resemble the academic accreditation process all colleges must pass.

He also notes increased authority of college and university presidents over athletic programs as a significant achievement of the reform movement. Being sure that presidents have full control, he says, will make athletics accountable to the institutions which sponsor them.

Changing times and an imperfect world will continue to leave Wake Forest and Hearn grappling with challenges to higher education.

"I think the biggest issues affecting higher education at the moment are cost—especially of private education—and the quality and availability of faculty," he says. "We have to make teaching at the college level an attractive profession, but we have to keep the cost to students affordable.

"That explains why the objectives of the Heritage and Promise campaign are financial support for faculty salaries and student financial aid," Hearn says.

The capital campaign, which ends in 1995, has raised $115 million toward its $150 million goal.

Like athletic reform, economic development, academic freedom and expanding facilities, the campaign goal is another high hurdle Wake Forest must clear. But, behind Hearn's leadership, no one doubts the university will reach the finish line.

President Hearn

Wake Forest University

In popular culture, young people proclaim practically anything as "excellent," to the extent that the word may not mean much anymore. At Wake Forest University, however, it describes students, professors, programs and facilities.

In its 1992 guide to "America's Best Colleges," for instance, U.S. News & World Report awarded Wake Forest a first place in all criteria considered: academic reputation, student selectivity, faculty resources, financial resources and student satisfaction. As a result, Wake Forest won top ranking in its category for the fifth consecutive year.

Wake Forest's pursuit of quality higher education is expressed in one of its newest programs, "Spires of Excellence." Its goal is national prominence in four major areas: individualized instruction, world view, aging and civic responsibility.

"At this university, which is developing national status, our priorities must offer the credible possibility of being among the top five universities in the nation in the focused areas," explains Provost David G. Brown, who conceived the program.

For the most part, Spires of Excellence promotes areas traditionally emphasized by Wake Forest curriculum and campus life. But, its creation marks a new, intensive effort to coordinate student and faculty interests to excel in those areas. As Brown explains it, the four spires grew out of fields in which faculty and students were already making significant accomplishments.

For instance, with its motto of "Pro Humanitate" — for humanity — Wake Forest has long nurtured a sense of civic responsibility within its students. It is the sort of commitment exhibited last spring, when hundreds of students worked together to build a home for a low-income family through Forsyth County's Habitat for Humanity chapter. After the four-bedroom, frame house was built on a campus field, it was moved to a neighborhood next to several other Habitat homes.

Through Spires of Excellence, students enjoyed new opportunities last summer to show their dedication to community service. With the university picking up the tab, eight students worked for agencies that could not otherwise have afforded to hire them.

Students selected for the summer internships worked with juvenile offenders, teen-age mothers, the homeless and many other deserving causes in various states. All will make presentations this fall to the Wake Forest community on their experiences.

During the academic year, Wake Forest students have unlimited opportunities to volunteer for local projects through the Volunteer Service Corps, a campus movement that annually recruits hundreds of students for community projects. The Volunteer Service Corps' success was recognized last year by the Winston-Salem Foundation, which awarded it $122,000 to expand student community service.

The corps, which joins students with organizations that help everyone from the homeless to the handicapped, uses the funds to maintain a full-time office and director.

As an encouragement to students, the university continues to look for new ways the institution can serve the community. One example is Wake Forest's key role in a new effort to improve science and math education in public schools.

The university is headquarters for one of 10 regional partnerships of the N. C. Science and Math Alliance, a federally funded organization set up to make dramatic improvements in the science and math education of all students in grades kindergarten through 12th.

Another spire that draws on Wake Forest tradition is world view. The university's goal is to make it possible for significantly more of its students to study outside the U.S., so they gain greater understanding of other cultures and peoples. An estimated 10 percent of Wake Forest's students already go outside the country during their undergraduate years to study.

Wake Forest residential centers in Venice and London have long introduced large groups of undergraduates to life and study in Europe. In recent years, new exchange programs have been developed by the university, allowing students to study in Japan, Russia, France, Germany and Spain. Students also participate in new study-abroad opportunities developed by organizations such as the Institute of European Studies.

When on the Wake Forest campus, students generally expect accessibility to their professors. The spire of individualized instruction is aimed at continuing and developing further Wake Forest's history of accessible faculty. As one professor describes it, the goal of that spire is to create more connections and interactions between faculty and students.

In the classroom, today's Wake Forest students enjoy a small student-professor ratio averaging only 14:1. Some 87 percent of faculty members hold doctoral degrees. Reynolds professors such as author-actress Maya Angelou, poet-translator Allen Mandelbaum, composer Dan Locklair, parasitologist Raymond Kuhn, philosopher-science historian Dudley Shapere, Southern historian Paul Escott, physicist Richard Williams and mathematician Robert Plemmons impart special classroom inspiration.

Sociologist Charles Longino will play an important role in the aging spire. The nation's leading expert on migration patterns of retirees, and a pioneer in the study of aging in American society, Longino is coordinating aging research and the development of new courses on the topic with faculty members in all disciplines, including the School of Law and Bowman Gray School of Medicine.

Another Wake Forest priority in recent years has been development of its physical facilities. The university is nearing completion of a $65 million construction and renovation plan that began in the mid-1980s.

Next April, Wake Forest will dedicate the Worrell Professional Center for Law and Management, which will house both the School of Law and the Babcock Graduate School of Management. The 178,000 square foot building, designed by internationally acclaimed architect Cesar Pelli, will provide both schools with much-needed space while promoting informal and scholarly exchange between the two disciplines.

Although the schools will operate in separate wings of the building, they will share certain areas, such as a library situated between their individual wings. The schools already share a successful JD/MBA degree program, in addition to their traditional degree offerings. Initial steps are being taken to expose law students to MBA courses, and vice versa.

Earlier this year, the university dedicated the new Edwin G. Wilson Wing of the Z. Smith Reynolds Library. Named in honor of the professor and administrator known affectionately to many as "Mr. Wake Forest," the wing gave the library the opportunity to take further advantage of new technological developments.

In the wing, library users have access to a computerized catalog listing the library's million-plus holdings. The wing also features an Information Technology Center offering numerous new services, including a bibliographical instruction laboratory, a variety of non-print media such as videotapes, and personal computers for word processing.

Other completed construction projects in recent years include the Benson University Center, Olin Physical Laboratory and Campus Stadium. Renovation of Winston and Salem Halls has been completed.

Additional classroom space for the college will continue to open up during the next couple of years, as space becomes available in Babcock and Carswell Halls, current homes of the law and MBA schools.

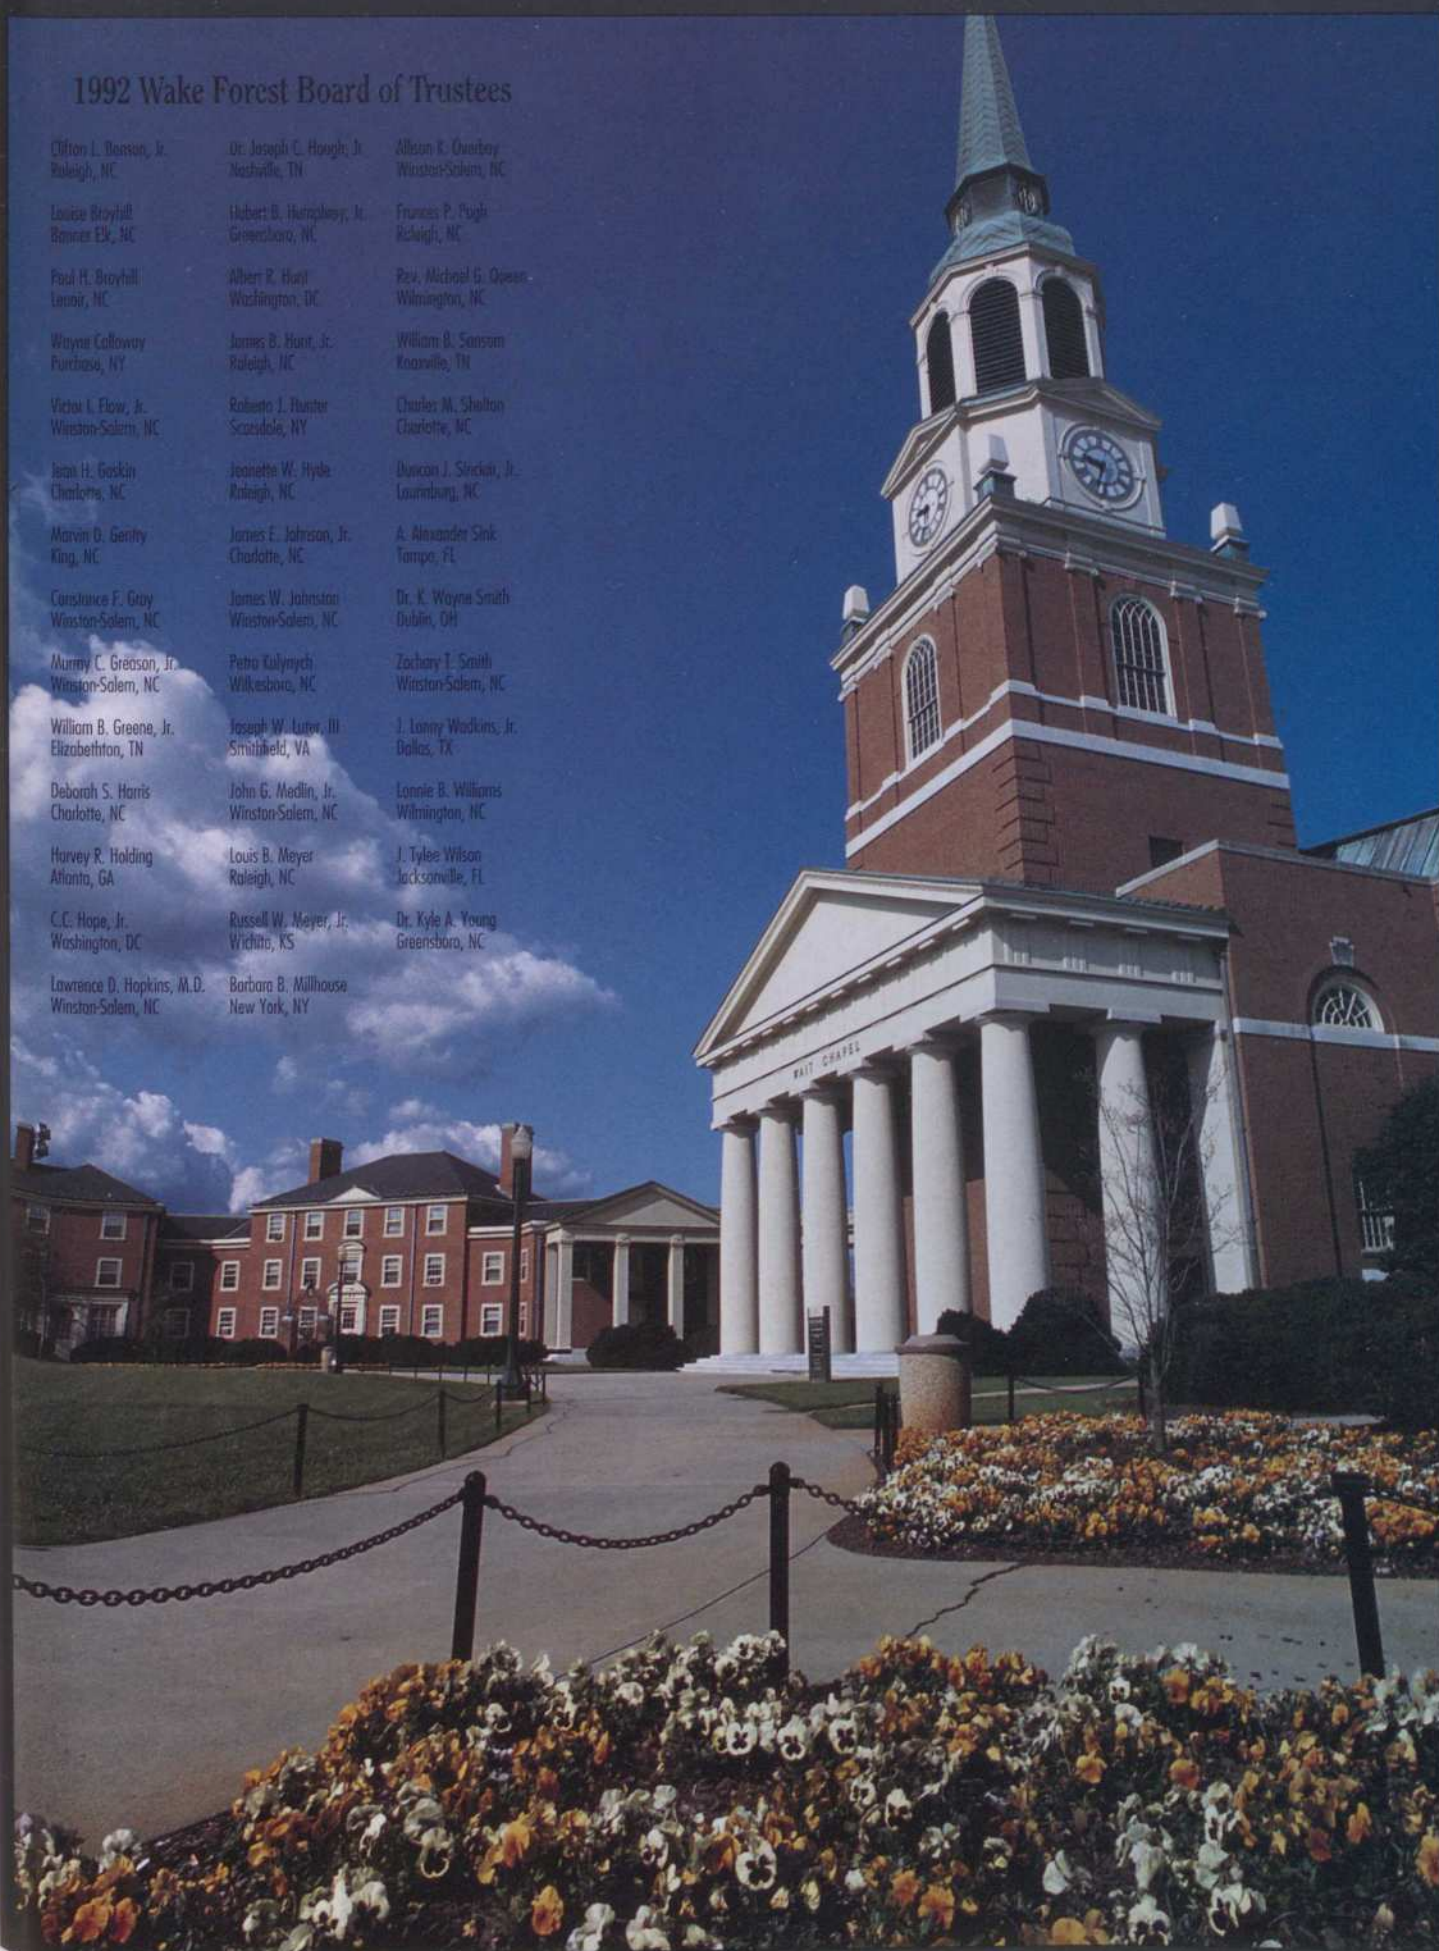

Support for Wake Forest's efforts toward excellence is coming from the $150 million Heritage and Promise capital campaign. Its major goals include the building of an even more distinguished faculty and student body by improving faculty salaries and increasing student financial aid.

The university's steadfast commitment to its need-blind admissions policy requires the university to develop further financial aid opportunities for students. Under the long-standing policy, students who qualify for admission receive financial aid to meet demonstrated need.

The campaign, expected to continue through 1995, is expected to assist with several other university priorities, including some construction costs and the development and support of academic programs.

Award-winning pizza no matter how you slice it.

After winning the "America's Choice Award" from Restaurants and Institutions magazine three years straight, it's no wonder we're America's number-one choice for pizza.

Our secret is our famous Pan Pizza. First, we start with dough made fresh daily. Then, we ladle on our tangy sauce and cover that with a layer of real mozzarella cheese. Next, we pile on your choice of mouthwatering toppings. We top it all off with a second layer of cheese, creating that great Pan Pizza taste.

Taste it yourself and discover why we're America's favorite.

Makin' it great!

On July 13, 1937, Krispy Kreme opened its doors on South Main Street in Winston-Salem.

Two glazed doughnuts cost a nickel.

A whole dozen went for 25¢.

They were hot, fresh, light and delicious. A secret recipe from down in New Orleans made the mouth-watering difference. It still does today. Now you can enjoy our legendary glazed. Or choose from powdered, creme-filled or fruit-filled.

Maybe you'd prefer

yours topped with sprinkles, coconut or chocolate.

Whatever your choice, they're all waiting for you, around the clock, 24 hours a day.

At nearly a hundred stores throughout the Southeast. And remember, when our Hot Doughnuts Now sign comes on, hot glazed Krispy Kremes are coming out. Try one.

And you'll understand why

we're so proud of what we do.

10 things you should know before you buy commercial carpet.

There's more to buying a commercial carpet than just placing an order. It takes planning from early in the designing stage and carries through even after the carpet is installed. Here are some of the things a Du Pont Approved Flooring Contractor can do for you:

- 1. Pre-Sale Consultation—We'll conduct an expert analysis to determine your job requirements—for traffic, stain and soil resistance, and type of carpet.
- 2. Life Cycle Costing—We'll help you get the carpet that fits your replacement schedule—2 years, 5 years or 10 years.
- 3. Selection—We offer you an enormous range from many mills, and because we are very large buyers, we can negotiate with mills to get exactly what you want.
- 4. Purchasing—We'll save you money with our knowledge of how to cut and install carpet to minimize waste.
- 5. Administration—We'll send out contracts and expedite shipping and transportation.
- 6. Full Service Management—We'll help write specs, inspect material, supervise installation and clean-up for far less than it would cost to contract each job out separately.
- 7. After The Sale—We'll help you keep your carpet looking good by giving you carpet cleaning recommendations and other maintenance help.
- 8. Independent Source—Because we are independent, we offer objective advice and recommendations.
- 9. Du Pont Certified Commercial Carpet—We offer a complete selection of Du Pont certified carpets that must pass a rigorous battery of tests before they receive Du Pont certification for performance and construction.
- 10. A Du Pont Approved Flooring Contractor—To understand specifier and end-user attitudes and how to work effectively with designers, all AFC's must go through an intensive education and training program.

A Du Pont Approved Flooring Contractor, is a valuable asset to you. Our main objective is to see your project through to its successful completion. Because when you look good, we look good.

Promoting Academic Excellence Through Athletics

A strong athletic program has always been a part of the Wake Forest tradition. The Deacons participated in the first football, baseball, and basketball games on college campuses in North Carolina. The pride brought about by Deacon athletics has had a tremendous effect on the Winston-Salem community as well as across the state of North Carolina.

In the area of funding, Wake Forest has been able to keep pace in the Atlantic Coast Conference with donations by the 3,500 members who make up the Deacon Club. These contributions provide funds for the Wake Forest athletic scholarships. With gate receipts from football and basketball events, radio and television revenues, and other sources of income used to financially support the operations of the Wake Forest Athletic Department, the funds raised by the Deacon Club are indispensable to the scholarship fund.

Wake Forest University Athletics is a program proud of its past and mindful of the promise of the future... a program that has seen phenomenal growth and continued success.

Deacon Club members have given many athletes a reason to get excited, including two-time All-ACC tight end John Henry Mills, through their continued support of Wake Forest athletics.

WHAT IS THE DEACON CLUB?

The Wake Forest University Deacon Club has the primary purpose of raising money from private sources for athletic scholarships. These funds are sought from alumni, staff, faculty, and friends of the University. Wake Forest University has earned a national reputation for its commitment to total excellence in both academics and athletics.

The Deacon Club is a special source of pride to its members. As a contributor to the Deacon Club, you will play a direct role in the continuing success of Wake Forest University's Athletic Department. At the same time, you will assist outstanding student-athletes in obtaining a quality college education at one of America's leading Universities. You'll be doing something for Deacon athletics and for the University itself, and you will receive great personal satisfaction from knowing that you helped.

In addition, there are many other benefits which are tied to the various levels of donations.

The number of benefits increases with the amount of the donation. The levels and benefits are outlined in the chart below.

MATCHING GIFTS

Many companies have a matching gift program for their employee's tax deductible gifts. If your company has a matching gift program, the Deacon Club qualifies for most such programs. Contact the Deacon Club if you need help with the details.

POINT SYSTEM

Members of the Deacon Club will receive benefits based on a point system.

The system will determine seating assignments in the Joel Coliseum and availability of ACC Tournament tickets. A member's rank is based on the total number of points awarded his membership. A member receives five points for each year of participation. The member receives an additional 10 points for each $1,000 contributed to the Deacon Club (1 point for each $100).

For more information, call the Deacon Club office at 919-759-5626.

STADIUM CLUB

ALL MEMBERS WHO CONTRIBUTE $500 OR MORE PER YEAR ARE REFERRED TO AS STADIUM CLUB MEMBERS.

The Stadium Club Room is a beautifully carpeted and air conditioned facility on the second floor of Bridger Fieldhouse. Golden W, Scholarship Sponsor, Executive Club, Gold Club, and Coliseum Club categories of the Deacon Club automatically qualify for membership. Club members enjoy special parking privileges in football and basketball. The Club is open two hours before each home game and on other special occasions. A buffet is offered to members before the home football games. Reservations are required.

ACC BASKETBALL TICKET INFORMATION

The allotment of ACC tickets is based on a combination of your points and current contribution. The point total since you joined the Deacon Club and your current contribution ($500 minimum) determines your allotment of ACC Tournament tickets. The point list is brought up to date at the end of December of each year, and members are notified of their position and ACC ticket allotment in January. Your position can change each year by changing your category of membership or by making an extra contribution. Gold Club members ($5000) automatically qualify to purchase two ACC Tournament tickets.

HOME SWEET HOME

Groves Stadium

The home of Wake Forest Football is Groves Stadium, considered by many to be one of the most beautiful stadiums of its size in the nation.

Dedicated on September 14, 1968, in a 10-6 Deacon loss to rival N.C. State, Groves represents an extensive fund-raising effort undertaken by the college during the mid-1960's which, for all practical purposes, made possible Wake Forest's continued membership in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

The stadium, which has 31,500 permanent seats and an outstanding natural grass playing surface, is located between Reynolds and Deacon Boulevards, one mile from the center of the Wake Forest campus. It also sits in the athletic center of Winston-Salem beside Ernie Shore Stadium, home of the professional minor league baseball Spirits of the Carolina League, and within one-half mile of the Lawrence Joel Veterans Memorial Coliseum, home of Demon Deacon Basketball.

Bridger Field House, located on the north end of the playing field, houses the Stadium Club for Deacon Club members, as well as locker room facilities for competing teams. An electronic scoreboard and computer message board are situated on the field house roof. The press box, which houses the box seat areas in addition to a modern media facility, is located on the west side.

This history of Groves Stadium must be traced back to the original home of the university in the eastern North Carolina village of Wake Forest.

When the school announced its planned move to Winston-Salem in 1948, the Groves family, led by Henry (the primary benefactor of the first Groves Stadium there in Wake Forest) and his brother Earl, made an additional financial commitment to insure that their family name would remain on whatever new facility that the football program would construct.

The new stadium, however, remained only a dream for nearly two decades. The actual cost of the campus relocation to Winston-Salem was much greater than first anticipated and more pressing physical needs in academic areas took precedence.

The Deacons had made frequent appearances in Winston-Salem's Bowman Gray Stadium in the years preceding the official college move and made that 16,000 seat facility their permanent home field in 1956. Winston-Salem philanthropist Charles H. Babcock donated a 77-acre plot of land for the building of a new stadium, but each time that the project seemed about to become a reality, other needs would emerge.

Finally in 1966, a fund-raising campaign was initiated. And while the $1.5 million raised was less than half of the total price tag, construction began the following year.

Wake Forest has compiled a 49-69-4 record in Groves Stadium. That mark includes two undefeated home seasons, which not surprisingly are two of the finest overall years in Deacon football history. Wake was 4-0 in Groves during its ACC Championship season of 1970; the 1979 squad improved that figure to 5-0 on its way to a Tangerine Bowl bid.

In 1987, Wake Forest and N.C. State, the same two schools that met in Groves Stadium's first game, played the 100th Deacon contest in the facility's history. This time, the Deacs came out on top, 21-3.

DEACON GREATS

Wake Forest All-Americans

BILL GEORGE-1949

George was named Wake Forest's first All-American in 1949 after an outstanding season at defensive tackle. A starter for four years, he was named to postseason all-star teams in 1949, 1950, and 1951. In addition to his performance as a defensive player, George served as the Deacons' placekicker and held the career mark for PATs until 1982. After graduating from Wake Forest, George went on to an outstanding professional career with the Chicago Bears and the Los Angeles Rams, earning All-Pro honors on eight occasions as a linebacker. He was inducted into the Pro Football Hall of Fame in 1974.

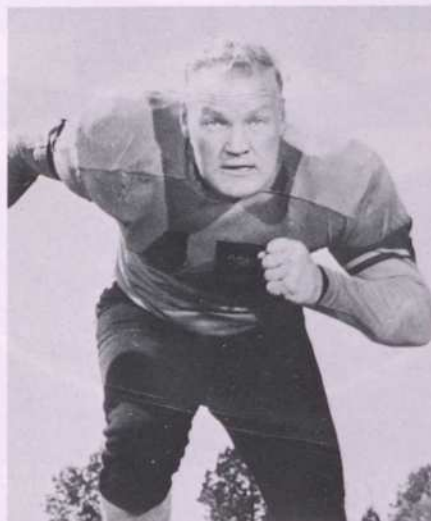

JIM STATON-1950

Staton became Wake Forest's second All-American in 1950 as a defensive tackle. That same season he earned All-Conference honors and was team Most Valuable Player. After graduating from Wake Forest, he pursued a career in professional football playing with the Washington Redskins and later with the Montreal Alouettes of the Canadian Football League.

While playing for Montreal, he earned All-Canadian League honors while playing for his former Wake Forest coach, Peahead Walker. He was inducted into the Wake Forest Sports Hall of Fame in 1982.

BOB BARTHOLOMEW-1955

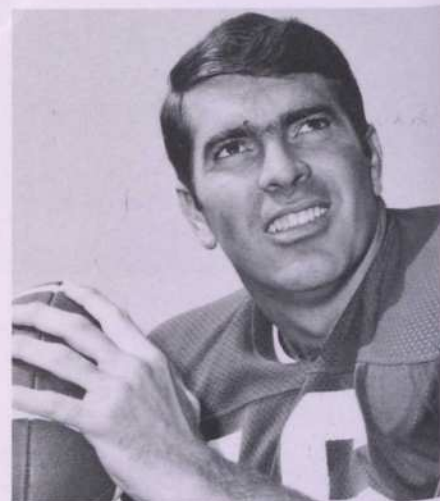

Bartholomew earned All-America honors in 1955 as a tackle and during the same season earned first-team Academic All-America recognition. He started all four years at Wake Forest and earned All-Conference honors three times in his career. In 1954 he was named National Lineman of the Week for his play against Maryland. Bartholomew played professionally with Montreal in the Canadian Football League before his career was ended by a serious knee injury. He served Wake Forest as executive director of the Deacon Club from 1968 until April of 1984 when he was killed in an automobile accident. He was inducted into the Wake Hall of Fame in February, 1984.

BILL BARNES-1956

Barnes was named All-America in 1956 as a fullback while also earning Atlantic Coast Conference Player-of-the-Year honors. He was Wake Forest's top rusher in 1955 and 1956 and became the first Deacon running back (and first ACC back) to rush for over 1,000 yards in a season when he gained 1,010 yards in 1956. He earned All-ACC honors in 1955 and 1956 and is currently 10th on the Deacon all-time rushing list. Barnes played professional football for the Philadelphia Eagles, Washington Redskins, and the Minnesota Vikings. He earned All-Pro honors from 1958-60 and was inducted into the Wake Forest Sports Hall of Fame in 1974.

NORMAN SNEAD-1960

One of the top passing quarterbacks in Atlantic Coast Conference history, Snead earned All-America honors in 1960. He was named to the All-ACC team in 1958, 1959, and 1960 and led the Atlantic Coast Conference in passing and total offense in 1959 and 1960. He is currently the fourth-leading passer in Wake Forest history with 4,040 yards. After leaving Wake Forest, Snead was an All-Pro performer in the National Football League playing for the Washington Redskins, Philadelphia Eagles, Minnesota Vikings, New York Giants, and San Francisco 49ers from 1961-76. He was inducted into the Wake Forest Sports Hall of Fame in 1977.

BRIAN PICCOLO-1964

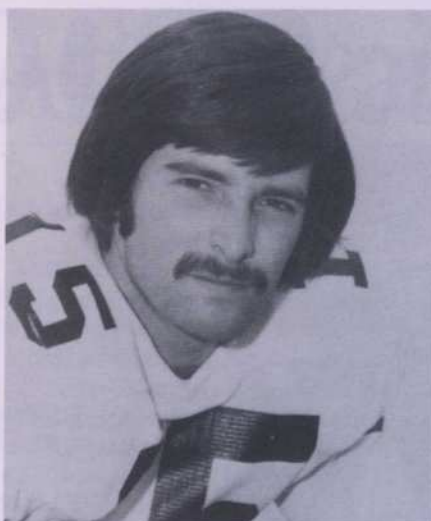

One of Wake Forest's most famed athletes is Piccolo, an All-America selection in 1964 after leading the nation in rushing and scoring. That same season Piccolo became the second Deacon football player to earn Atlantic Coast Conference Player-of-the-Year honors. He led Wake Forest in rushing in both 1963 and 1964 and is currently in eighth place on the all-time Deacon rushing list. Following his graduation, Piccolo played professionally for the Chicago Bears for four seasons before his career came to an end due to cancer. He died in June of 1970 and was inducted into the Wake Forest Sports Hall of Fame later that year.

WIN HEADLEY-1970

A three-year starter, Headley earned All-America honors as a defensive tackle on the 1970 ACC championship Deacon squad. He was named to the All-ACC team that same year, was team Most Valuable Player, and the recipient of the Bill George Award given to the team's most outstanding lineman. That spring, Headley was named the co-winner of the Arnold Palmer Award given to the top athlete at Wake Forest. He was drafted by the Green Bay Packers and after one season in the NFL went on to play briefly with the Montreal Alouettes of the Canadian Football League.

CHUCK RAMSEY-1973

Ramsey was named to several All-America teams after leading the nation in punting in 1973 with a 44.8 yard average. He still holds numerous Wake Forest kicking records and ranks among the all-time NCAA leaders with a career average of 44 yards per punt. He participated in five post-season all-star games before joining the Chicago Fire of the World Football League in 1974. He sat out the 1975 and 1976 seasons before joining the New York Jets in 1977, and stayed a member of that NFL team for eight seasons.

BILL ARMSTRONG-1976

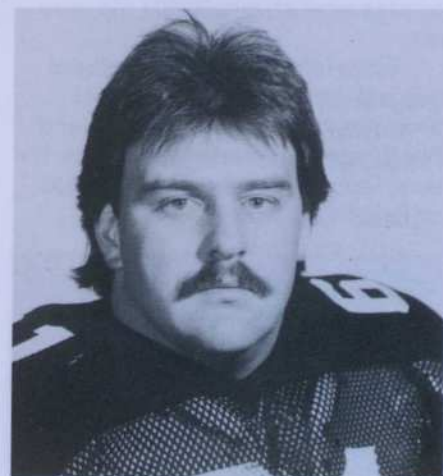

Armstrong became the first player in Wake Forest football history to be named as a consensus All-America selection, earning that honor in 1976. After playing quarterback early in his career, Armstrong was switched to safety and was an All-ACC selection in 1975 and 1976. He was named team Most Valuable Player as well as the recipient of the Arnold Palmer Award given to the top athlete at Wake Forest as a senior. He participated in several all-star games and was drafted in the eighth round of the NFL draft by the Cleveland Browns.

BILL ARD-1980

One of the top offensive linemen in Wake Forest history, Ard was an All-America selection in 1980. He started for three seasons at offensive guard and was selected to the All-ACC team as a senior. Ard was the recipient of the Bill George award that same season in addition to serving as team captain. He participated in both the Hula and Senior bowls before being drafted in the eighth round by the New York Giants. Ard was named to the All-Rookie team and has been a fixture at starting guard during his 10 seasons in the National Football League.

PAUL KISER-1986

Wake Forest's most recent All-America selection, Kiser was named to both the Football Writers Association and Sporting News first-team All-America units in 1986. He was a leader on the Deacon offensive unit that established eight school records and led the ACC in scoring. An All-ACC performer as well in 1986, Kiser was additionally honored by the conference coaches, who voted him recipient of the prestigious Jacobs Blocking Trophy, presented annually to the premier blocker in the league. He became the first Wake Forest player to receive that award since formation of the ACC in 1953. Kiser participated in a number of postseason all-star contests as a senior and was chosen in the sixth round of the NFL draft by the Atlanta Falcons.

The Atlantic Coast Conference

THE TRADITION

Consistency. It's the mark of true excellence in any endeavor.

However, in today's intercollegiate athletics, competition has become so balanced and so competitive that it is virtually impossible to maintain a high level of consistency.

Yet the Atlantic Coast Conference has defied the odds. Now in its 40th year of competition, the ACC has long enjoyed the reputation as one of the strongest and most competitive intercollegiate conferences in the nation. And that is not mere conjecture, the numbers support it.

Since the league's inception in 1953, Atlantic Coast Conference schools have captured 42 NCAA and AIAW championships, including 24 in men's competition and 18 in women's. In addition, 72 men and 22 women have earned the coveted title of NCAA champion.

On the gridiron, Maryland in 1953, Clemson in 1981 and Georgia Tech in 1991 were acclaimed national champions in football.

If success is best measure in terms of wins and losses, then the ACC has proved itself to be among the elite in Division I-A football. The nine ACC teams are a combined 64-56-5 (.532) in bowl games — a winning percentage second only to the PAC-10's .555 success rate.

Georgia Tech, with a 17-8 (.680) postseason mark, is No. 1 among Division I-A teams in bowl winning percentage. The Yellow Jackets lead a list of three ACC teams that rank in the top seven all-time bowl teams. Clemson is sixth with an 11-7 (.611) record and Florida State is seventh at 11-7-2 (.600).

Senior George Coghill joined John Henry Mills as first team All-Atlantic Coast Conference members last season after leading Wake Forest in interceptions and punt returns.

The ACC also stands at the forefront of intercollegiate athletics in terms of academic accomplishments of its student-athletes. That accomplishment is nowhere better reflected than in the CFA Academic Achievement Award which is awarded annually to a CFA member institution with the highest graduation rate among members of its football team. Six times over the past 11 years, an ACC member school has claimed the award. Since 1952, 38 ACC football players have earned first-team Academic All-America honors 43 times.

THE CHAMPIONSHIPS

The conference currently conducts championship competition in 23 sports, including 12 for men and 11 for women.

The first ACC championship was held in swimming on Feb. 25, 1954, while the league's inaugural basketball tournament took place Mar. 4-6, 1954 at North Carolina State, drawing 36,000 fans over the three days. The conference did not conduct championships in cross country, wrestling or tennis during the first year.

The 12 sports for men include football, cross country, soccer, basketball, swimming, indoor and outdoor track, wrestling, baseball, tennis, golf and lacrosse. Fencing, which was started in 1971, was discontinued in 1981.

Women's sports were initiated in 1977 with the first championship meet being held in tennis at Wake Forest University, Oct. 6-8. Conference championships for women are currently conducted in cross country, volleyball, field hockey, soccer, basketball, swimming, indoor and outdoor track, tennis, golf and softball.

THE YEAR IN REVIEW

The ACC enjoyed another productive year in 1991-92 as conference teams captured four national championships, earned two berths in the combined "Final Fours" of the men's and women's basketball tournament and won over 70 percent of their games against non-conference opponents in all sports.

Duke made it two men's basketball crowns in a row defeating Michigan 71-51 in the title game. The Blue Devils, led by unanimous national player of the year Christian Laettner, maintained a No. 1 national ranking throughout the course of the season en route to a 34-2 record.

Virginia's men's soccer team claimed its second national title in three years, knocking off Santa Clara via penalty kicks in a rematch of the 1989 final. The Cavaliers' only loss last season was to conference rival Wake Forest.

On the women's side of the ledger, North Carolina once again brought home the NCAA championship trophy in women's soccer, defeating Wisconsin 3-1 in the final match. The Tar Heels capped off a perfect 24-0 season winning their sixth straight title and ninth overall.

The Maryland women's lacrosse team, after finishing second for the past two years, garnered the ACC's fourth and last national crown of the year. The Terps, who lost to Virginia in last year's final and to Harvard in 1990, rallied from a three-goal second half deficit to avenge that setback two years ago with an 11-10 win over their Ivy League opponent.

In conference competition, North Carolina led all schools winning an all-time high nine ACC championships. N.C. State was second with four league crowns followed by Clemson and Duke with three apiece, Virginia two, Georgia Tech and Florida State one each.

THE HISTORY

The Atlantic Coast Conference was founded May 8, 1953 at Sedgefield Inn near Greensboro, NC. The conference's seven charter members from three states included Clemson University, Duke University, University of Maryland, University of North Carolina, North Carolina State University, University of South Carolina and Wake Forest University.

The withdrawal of the seven schools from the Southern Conference came early on the morning of May 8, 1953, during the annual spring meeting of the conference. On June 14, 1953, the seven members met in Raleigh, NC, where a set of bylaws were adopted and the name Atlantic Coast Conference was officially recognized.

On Dec. 4, 1953, the conference officially admitted the University of Virginia to the league. The only withdrawal by a member institution occurred June 30, 1971 when the University of South Carolina tendered its resignation.

The conference continued with seven members until Apr. 3, 1978 when Georgia Institute of Technology was admitted. The expansion reached nine schools just two years ago when Florida State University was admitted on Sept. 15, 1990.

There have been only three commissioners since the conference's inception. Former Wake Forest Athletic Director James H. (Jim) Weaver was elected to be the first commissioner on May 28, 1954. He served until his death on July 11, 1970.

Norvell Neve was named acting commissioner on July 23, 1970 and served until Mar. 1, 1971 when Robert C. (Bob) James assumed the duties. James served the ACC for more than 16 years until his death on May 11, 1987. Eugene F. (Gene) Corrigan, a former assistant to Weaver and later athletic director at Virginia, inherited the commissioner's role on July 21, 1987.

THE MARQUE OF A WINNER

What makes a winner? At Wake Forest it's a combination of natural talent, rigorous training, self discipline and a commitment to excel. At The Marque of Winston-Salem it's superior quality, exceptional service, years of experience and a dedication to customer satisfaction. In many ways, our goals are the same. We strive to achieve our best in whatever our endeavor. Because long after the competition is over, that's the true definition of a winner.

NCAA's Highest Honor — The Theodore Roosevelt Award

The Theodore Roosevelt Award is the highest honor the National Collegiate Athletic Association may confer on an individual. It is presented annually to a distinguished citizen of national reputation and outstanding accomplishment who has earned a varsity athletics award in college. That individual must have shown continuing interest and concern for physical fitness and competitive sport, and exemplified by personal example most clearly and forcefully the ideals and purposes to which college athletics programs and amateur sports competition are dedicated. The award is presented annually at the honors luncheon at the Association's Convention.

The 1992 "Teddy" recipient and 26th honoree is Jack F. Kemp, Secretary of the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development.

The nation's foremost Federal economic-development and housing official, Kemp began his tenure as a member of President George Bush's Cabinet February 6, 1989. As HUD Secretary, he is responsible for administering a variety of Federally assisted housing, economic-development and fair-housing enforcement activities across the nation, as well as the supervision of HUD's headquarters in Washington, D.C.; 10 regional offices, and 81 field offices.

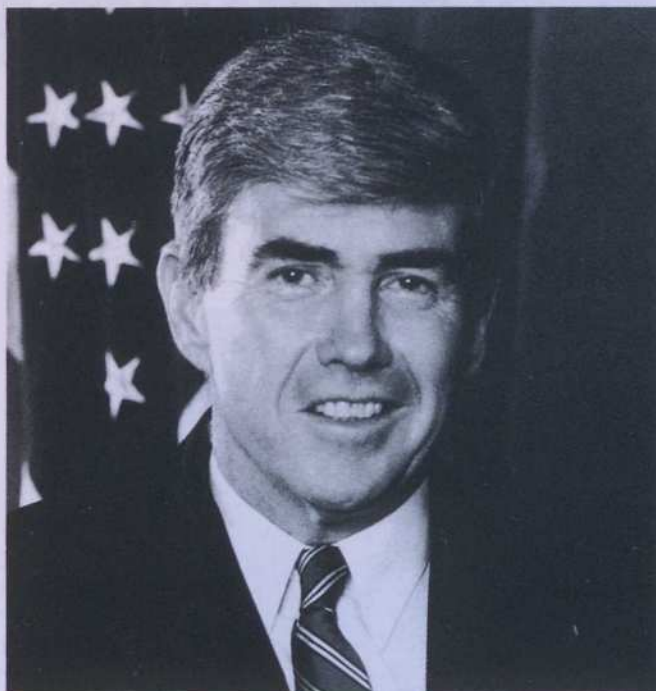

Since assuming his duties, Kemp has been instrumental in the development and passage of two major pieces of legislation: the HUD reform bill and President Bush's HOPE initiative (Homeownership and Opportunity for People Everywhere). The HUD Reform bill helped bring to an end the problems of waste, fraud and abuse that plagued HUD programs under past administrations, while the HOPE initiative provides, among other things, grants to help public-housing residents and low-income families manage and purchase government-owned housing.

A native of Los Angeles, Kemp's political career has spanned three decades. Prior to his appointment as HUD Secretary, he was a member of the U.S. House of Representatives from 1971 to 1989. During that time, he spent seven years in a leadership position as the chairman of the House Republican Conference.

Before his political career, Kemp enjoyed tremendous success in athletics. While at Occidental College, he competed in football and track and field. A three-year starter as a member of the Tigers football squad, he earned honorable mention Little All-America honors as well as all-conference accolades. He also served as cocaptain during his senior campaign. As a member of the track and field squad, he earned two letters while also setting the school javelin record.

After the completion of his undergraduate studies, Kemp embarked on a 13-year career as a professional football quarterback. As a member of the American Football League's Buffalo Bills, he guided his team to consecutive AFL championships (1964 and 1965). His exploits during the 1965 campaign earned him the league's most-valuable-player award. In addition to his on-the-field accomplishments, he cofounded the AFL Players Association and was elected president of the association.

Heavily involved in charitable and/or community activities, Kemp serves as vice-president of National Football League Charities, cofounder of Christian Rescue Effort for the Emancipation of Dissidents (C.R.E.E.D.) and associate trustee of the National Art Museum of Sport.
